DAILY GEOPOLITICS

Daily Geopolitics Report - Friday, November 13, 2026

Sources covering today:

The Daily Telegraph | Der Spiegel | Die Welt | The Economist | Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung | The Globe and Mail | The Guardian | Los Angeles Times | Neue Zürcher Zeitung | Süddeutsche Zeitung | USA Today | The Washington Post

Technology & Media 11 sources · 2 languages

Nvidia CEO Jensen Huang espionage scandal and resignation

Nearly every major outlet covers the same core event - Nvidia CEO Jensen Huang's abrupt resignation amid an affair with Alice Huang, a woman US officials suspect of being a Chinese intelligence asset tied to Megaspeed, a firm accused of helping smuggle restricted chips to China - but the framing diverges sharply. The Economist takes the most forceful editorial stance, running several opinion pieces insisting bluntly that Huang "must go," while another Economist piece widens the blame to Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick's lax enforcement and even to Trump himself, and yet another frames the affair as potentially "the most expensive shag in history" for its corporate fallout. The Washington Post builds the most extensive factual investigation, covering America's failure to assist Singapore's probe, congressional demands for deeper scrutiny, Nvidia's first-ever board chair appointment, and a bot-driven social-media campaign defending Huang; in a column for the paper, Craig Singleton argues chipmakers cannot be trusted to police themselves on China, while an unsigned piece warns the episode exposed dangerously discretionary power held by Lutnick. The Guardian offers two distinct angles: in his column, Nils Pratley argues Huang's fall was a predictable "busted flush" given his reckless personal conduct, while in a separate piece Aisha Down probes whether the AI economy can function without the opaque web of relationships Huang personally built, and a third Guardian piece serves as an explainer for readers. Der Spiegel provides the deepest personal profiling, portraying Huang in one piece as an unaccountable "patriarch" running a nearly four-trillion-dollar company, leaving open whether his wife is truly a spy, while another piece focuses on how his closeness to Trump shielded him politically. At Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Winand von Petersdorff's article relays a short-seller's detailed claims that Huang knowingly enabled chip diversion, while a separate FAZ piece profiles Alice Huang herself and Beijing's denials. Neue Zürcher Zeitung stands out for a contrarian angle: in a column by Markus Städeli, Huang's ouster is framed as actually lucky for Nvidia and the US AI industry by forcing more conservative risk management, alongside a detailed chronology and a profile of an analyst who predicted the crisis. The Globe and Mail and Los Angeles Times focus mainly on economic fallout - fears of an AI bubble bursting and Lutnick's own shaky standing in the White House. Süddeutsche Zeitung adds the political dimension of Democratic senators demanding record preservation, while USA Today and Die Welt offer more straightforwardly factual accounts of the resignation and its espionage backdrop.

Sources: Der Spiegel, Die Welt, The Economist, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung, USA Today, The Washington Post

Citations (40)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 72 — "Das perfekte Ziel"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 73 — "Jensen Huangs Spionage-Skandal erschüttert Nvidia"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 74 — "Nvidia-Chef Jensen Huang: Zwischen Spionageverdacht und…"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 75 — "Jensen Huang: Patriarch, Machtmensch, Risikoträger –…"

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9 — "Nvidia engulfed in turmoil over Jensen…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 23 — "Nvidious: Jensen Huang must go"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 24 — "Jensen Huang's position is untenable, and…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 25 — "The Megaspeed Debacle and Nvidia's Culture…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 231 — "Nvidia CEO scandal raises fears of…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 232 — "Nvidia's chip-smuggling scandal reaches the White…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 233 — "Nvidia's China chip scandal threatens Jensen…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 241 — "SoftBank's AI bet unravels"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 260 — "Mr Huang's Chinese affair could be…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 26 — "Nvidia-Chef Huang tritt zurück"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 26 — "Siemens trägt ein KI-Risiko"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 26 — "Die vielen Karrieren der Alice Huang"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 27 — "Der Nvidia-Chef, die Chinesin und der…"

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1 — "Nvidia CEO's resignation threatens to burst…"

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 8 — "Big question for Nvidia is whether…"

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 8 — "Lutnick's White House future in doubt…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7 — "Can the AI economy survive without…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 21 — "Chips are down: Why is Jensen…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 32 — "Jensen Huang was a busted flush…"

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 12

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1 — "Der Nvidia-Chef muss seinen Posten räumen"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 21 — "Sturz von Jensen Huang: Wendepunkt für…"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 23 — "Der Finanzanalyst, der das Unheil kommen…"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 23 — "Affären bringen Jensen Huang zu Fall…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2 — "Nvidia CEO Jensen Huang resigns amid…"

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 32 — "Investors worry for AI trade"

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 33 — "Nvidia CEO Huang's departure tied to…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1 — "U.S. did little to aid spy…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Nvidia stood behind its chief. Now…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Calls grow for a deeper investigation"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Current CFO will become interim CEO"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7 — "Jensen Huang's online defenders"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16 — "The Nvidia scandal is about more…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "The Huang honey-trap tale sends a…"

Diplomacy & International Relations

10 sources · 2 languages

Russia-Ukraine peace talks in Abu Dhabi and Moscow

Most outlets agree on the basic facts - talks brokered by Trump's envoys Witkoff and Kushner in Abu Dhabi and then Moscow, producing a prisoner-swap deal but no breakthrough - yet they differ sharply in framing. The Economist, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, The Washington Post and USA Today offer relatively factual coverage centered on Putin's refusal to soften territorial demands and his rejection of foreign peacekeepers, while The Globe and Mail and Die Welt, in Tim Ross's article, add emphasis on mutual distrust and Russia's push to expand the agenda to Europe's entire security architecture. The Economist returns repeatedly, across several pieces, to the contrast between Trump's urgency for a deal and Putin's lack of any, with Russia pressing its battlefield advantage instead. The sharpest critical angle comes from the German press: in a column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sebastian Gierke argues Putin has effectively "got Trump in his pocket," steering the talks toward a vague, Russia-friendly notion of a European security order rather than a real ceasefire, while in a column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nikolas Busse accuses Trump of acting as Putin's "willing helper," letting Moscow extract concessions while giving nothing in return. Another Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung report, by Friedrich Schmidt and Matthias Wyssuwa, warns that Russia is exploiting the talks to revive its maximalist pre-2022 demands and sideline Europe. Two further Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung pieces, by Thomas Gutschker and by Alexander Haneke and Niklas Zimmermann, shift from the central diplomacy to the intra-European fight over Ukraine aid financing, detailing tensions between Chancellor Merz and leaders like Slovakia's Fico. Neue Zürcher Zeitung carries two distinct voices: a factual report by Antonio Fumagalli on the European Political Community summit in Dublin, and a column by Anna Schor-Tschudnowskaja arguing that Russian propaganda has perverted the very concept of "peace" to mask its war of aggression.

Sources: Die Welt, The Economist, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung, USA Today, The Washington Post

Citations (20)

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "Russia and Ukraine hold first peace…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 167 — "Donald Trump is in a hurry…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 179 — "Pound, pound, talk"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 180 — "US-Russia talks on Ukraine security guarantees…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 181 — "Donald Trump is in a hurry…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Europa droht eine Ausweitung der Gespräche"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Wieder prescht Merz ohne Absprache vor"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10 — "Putins Helfer Trump"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10 — "Mit Fäkalsprache gegen Merz"

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "Putin refuses to soften his demands…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "Russia ramping up attacks ‘to pressure…"

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9 — "Parmelin steht zum Abschluss im Rampenlicht"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 19 — "Ein Mythos vom «Frieden»"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "Putin und Trump: Er weiß, er…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7 — "Kushner und Witkoff treffen Putin"

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 31

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 12

Domestic Politics 6 sources · 2 languages

US midterm elections political earthquake

Coverage of the US midterm earthquake splits between straight reporting on the scale of the Republican defeat and competing interpretations of what it means. The Guardian provides the most institutional framing: David Smith describes a nationwide Democratic "blue-nami" that shattered Trump's coalition, attributing it to anger over costs, corruption and the unpopular Iran war, and likening the repudiation to the Watergate-era midterms. A companion Guardian piece turns to the Republican succession fight, with JD Vance and other 2028 hopefuls maneuvering amid disagreement over whether this marks the end of Maga, while in a Guardian column Chris Stein emphasizes the strategic leverage Democrats now hold heading into 2028, tempered by the filibuster and Trump's veto. Die Welt and Neue Zürcher Zeitung converge on the same flashpoint race in Mississippi but diverge in emphasis: in a Die Welt column, Gregor Schwung stresses the immediate political fallout for Vance and 2028, and a further Die Welt analysis details Republican panic over a possible filibuster-proof Democratic majority, whereas in a Neue Zürcher Zeitung column Andreas Scheiner foregrounds the historic and grassroots dimension of Scott Colom's win as the state's first Black senator since Reconstruction. Cutting against the Democratic-triumph narrative, in a Die Welt column Marc Felix Serrao argues there is no genuine leftward "vibe shift," insisting Trump won the culture war but was punished for broken economic promises. In a Los Angeles Times column, LZ Granderson turns the lens inward on the Democrats, arguing Chuck Schumer is out of step with an insurgent new generation of candidates and voters. A reader letter in Der Spiegel, from Horst Winkler, hails the Democratic result as a stunning triumph while warning Trump may now rule increasingly by decree. The Economist, meanwhile, offers a separate methodological angle, examining how polling accuracy held up despite high-profile misses in the US and Brazil, without taking a position on the result's political meaning.

Sources: Der Spiegel, Die Welt, The Economist, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, Neue Zürcher Zeitung

Citations (10)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 110

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2 — "Das Demokraten-Wunder von Mississippi"

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3 — "US-Senatswahlen in Mississippi und Ausblick auf…"

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7 — "Wo Trump recht hatte – und…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 214

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 11 — "How Maga as we know it…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 12 — "US midterms deal blow to Trump…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14 — "Party gains potent leverage"

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Diplomacy & International Relations

6 sources · 1 language

Trump sidelines Vance on Iran policy

All the outlets cover the same core event - Trump halting Vance's push for an Iran deal and redirecting him toward domestic matters - but each frames it differently. The Daily Telegraph, in Emily Smith's report, centers the story on party politics: Vance himself blamed the war for Republican midterm losses, prompting Trump to order him to focus on domestic crime instead. Los Angeles Times, across both its articles (one by Ana Ceballos, one unsigned), widens the lens to include Trump's simultaneous claims of election fraud and threats against Democrats and Mexico, framing the Iran pullback as part of a broader political offensive. USA Today, in Bo Erickson's reporting and a companion unsigned piece, foregrounds the military backdrop - the naval blockade and tanker strikes in the Strait of Hormuz - as context for Trump's declaration that no deal is needed, while also noting the internal tension between Trump's insistence the war is necessary and Vance's apparent interest in reviving talks. The Globe and Mail, bylined to Boe Erickson, stresses the contradiction within the administration itself, between Trump's public rejection of a deal and parallel signals of interest in renewed negotiations. The Guardian's Andrew Roth frames the move as a deliberate strategic choice to maintain the blockade on Iranian ports while downplaying any need for further strikes. The Washington Post offers the most layered picture: the article by Michael Birnbaum and Rachel Chason emphasizes the sidelining of Vance's outreach to Iranian hard-liners in favor of sustained economic pressure, while its companion unsigned piece highlights internal administration divisions and anxiety among Gulf allies, who see Iran as emboldened by perceived American political weakness - a more critical angle largely absent from the other sources.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, USA Today, The Washington Post

Citations (9)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 29

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1 — "Trump shifts Vance's focus off Iran"

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Trump reassigns Vance from Iran talks,…"

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 29 — "Trump says no Iran deal needed,…"

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 33 — "Iran nuclear talks stall amid internal…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1 — "Trump says no Iran deal is…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 12 — "Trump ends Vance effort in Iran…"

Migration & Society 5 sources · 2 languages

Gaza humanitarian crisis - flooding and displacement

Most sources cover the same storm event that flooded tens of thousands of tents sheltering displaced Palestinians in Gaza, but they diverge in emphasis. The Guardian and The Washington Post offer largely factual accounts of the casualties and scale of flooding, with The Washington Post, in a piece by Mohamad El Chamaa and Lior Soroka, adding the angle of fear that this is only the start of a harsher winter and that reconstruction remains stalled amid Israeli-Hamas disputes over disarmament. The Globe and Mail, in a report by Hasan Jaber, centers on the lived experience of displaced families and the physical devastation of the camps, also noting the absence of ceasefire-mandated reconstruction. The Economist adds a distinct political angle, highlighting unusual criticism from Donald Trump's Board of Peace toward Israeli politicians over "insufficient" aid provisions. In contrast to these mostly factual reports, a Der Spiegel column signed by JVM argues explicitly that the suffering is not a natural calamity but the product of political decisions, assigning blame to both Hamas, for failing to disarm, and above all to the Israeli government, for restricting aid and building materials in what the author calls a "collective punishment" that must end. A separate Der Spiegel piece mentions Gaza's humanitarian catastrophe only briefly, bundled together with coverage of the Iran war after the US midterm elections, without independent detail.

Sources: Der Spiegel, The Economist, The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, The Washington Post
Citations (6)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 5 — "Der Irankrieg nach den Midtermwahlen in…"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 63 — "Erst kam der Regen, dann der…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Energy & Environment 5 sources · 2 languages

COP31 climate summit disagreements

Coverage of COP31 in Antalya splits into three distinct angles. The Globe and Mail and USA Today, in near-identical reports by Simon Jessop (with co-authors), offer straightforward accounts of the clash between small island states demanding urgent emissions cuts, European nations pushing electrification, and fossil-fuel producers like Venezuela defending their right to keep developing oil and gas - both organizing their coverage around the same quoted warning that "the planet is not dying, it is being killed." A separate, unsigned USA Today piece expands this frame by adding UK Prime Minister Burnham's argument that energy security, given disruptions from the wars in Iran and Ukraine, requires moving away from fossil fuels. By contrast, The Guardian, the Los Angeles Times and Süddeutsche Zeitung center their coverage on Greta Thunberg's return to the international stage and her activist critique. In The Guardian, Oliver Milman reports Thunberg accusing the very governments meant to "rescue" the planet of killing it, while also noting John Kerry's rebuke of Trump and the US withdrawal from climate cooperation. The Los Angeles Times piece, bylined by three reporters, emphasizes Thunberg's claim that political and economic systems have become "incompatible with human nature," framing her as accusing the summit's hosts of hypocrisy. In his column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Thomas Hummel adds a dimension absent elsewhere: Thunberg explicitly blames the fossil fuel industry for deliberately delaying climate action, and goes further by criticizing host country Turkey for selling oil to Israel and calling for justice for Kurdistan - a geopolitical angle not found in any English-language source. Finally, a second Guardian article offers a markedly different, more optimistic angle: IEA chief Fatih Birol argues that electrification driven by AI, transport and air conditioning is now unstoppable and could improve energy security and affordability if countries commit to renewable electrification - a techno-optimistic framing that stands apart from the dramatic, confrontational tone of the rest of the coverage.

Sources: The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, Süddeutsche Zeitung, USA Today
Citations (7)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 12

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16 — "Greta Thunberg tells Cop31 climate summit…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16 — "The future's electric: Birol on the…"

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 29 — "World leaders set clashing priorities at…"

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 33 — "COP31: World leaders warn planet 'being…"

Security & Conflict 4 sources · 2 languages

Israeli strikes on Gaza hospitals despite ceasefire

All four outlets cover the same strike on Nasser Hospital in Khan Younis, which killed six people including a surgeon despite the October ceasefire, but they diverge in framing. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung offers the leanest account, relaying Israel's claim that the target was a Hamas commander and noting tersely that deadly attacks keep recurring despite the truce. The Daily Telegraph, in Lilia Sebouai's report, foregrounds vivid on-the-ground detail - destroyed operating theatres and staff shoveling floodwater - paired with the World Health Organization's condemnation that hospitals must never be militarized or attacked. The Guardian, in William Christou's piece, dwells more on the legal framework, stressing that attacking healthcare facilities is illegal under international humanitarian law while also noting the caveat that such facilities can lose protected status if used militarily, presenting both sides of that argument. The Los Angeles Times, in Kareem Chehayeb's report, goes furthest in framing the strike as part of a systematic pattern devastating Gaza's health system over the course of the war, explicitly calling such attacks war crimes under international humanitarian law and pointedly noting that Israel's justification - citing Hamas use of hospitals - comes with only limited supporting evidence.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times
Citations (4)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 24

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Domestic Politics

4 sources · 2 languages

Israeli government formation under Eisenkot

All five sources cover the crisis around Gadi Eisenkot's attempt to form a new Israeli government after Netanyahu's coalition lost its majority, but each frames it differently. The Economist, across several pieces, focuses most closely on the mechanics of coalition-building itself: one article asks whether Eisenkot can seize the moment to form a government, another details the obstacles - conflicting campaign promises across secular, ultra-Orthodox and Arab parties that will require painful compromises on a tight timeline - and a third stresses the urgency of ousting Netanyahu, whom it accuses of trying to drag Israel into another war with Iran and of pressuring the security services to investigate Arab votes and disqualify the election results. A further Economist piece documents Netanyahu's own warnings that a government reliant on "Islamists" would destroy Israel, set against Eisenkot's dismissal of this rhetoric as hysterical. Die Welt instead zeroes in on one concrete episode - Eisenkot's public warning to Netanyahu not to take "dangerous steps" against Iran before a new government is sworn in - stressing the danger of leaving security chiefs in an impossible position. The Guardian emphasizes an international angle, framing the 28-day mandate given to Eisenkot against the backdrop of Israel's growing isolation abroad and the International Criminal Court's warrant against Netanyahu, quoting Eisenkot and Herzog's joint acknowledgment of that isolation. In his column for Süddeutsche Zeitung, Leonard Scharfenberg offers the starkest portrait, describing Netanyahu as a politician "in panic mode" fighting by any means to prevent an Eisenkot premiership, escalating tensions with Iran and undermining the election's legitimacy - presenting him as a leader at the end of his rope.

Sources: Die Welt, The Economist, The Guardian, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (7)

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 146 — "Gadi Eisenkot has a chance to…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 147 — "Gadi Eisenkot has a chance to…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 148 — "Eisenkot's Struggle to Form a Government…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 149 — "Gadi Eisenkot has a chance to…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Society & Culture

4 sources · 1 language

Antisemitism debate and Israel in German politics

The debate over antisemitism and Israel in German politics, with the Claudia Roth episode as a recurring flashpoint, draws sharply divergent framings across the sources. In Die Welt, a piece by Jan Alexander Casper quotes Daniel Neumann of the Zentralrat der Juden in Deutschland arguing that Claudia Roth and similar left-wing milieus harbor a "guilt cult" mentality seeking liberation from Auschwitz's historical burden, which frames legitimate Jewish institutional criticism as oppressive "pressure." A separate investigative piece in Die Welt by Leander F. Badura shifts the focus to structural infiltration, revealing the far-reaching influence of the Trotskyist network Marx21 - which openly calls for Israel's destruction as part of an "anti-imperialist revolution" - within Die Linke and German trade unions. Süddeutsche Zeitung takes a more defensive stance on the substance of Jewish concerns: in a column, Deborah Hartmann argues that Jewish life in Germany remains precarious precisely because antisemitic threats are routinely trivialized and politicized, citing even a former state minister's wish to shed the burden of history as symptomatic of the problem. In the same paper, a guest essay by Volker Weiß turns the lens back on Die Welt itself, accusing its journalist Tilman Krause of whitewashing far-right publisher Götz Kubitschek while ignoring his antisemitic writings, and charging Springer's outlets with a double standard - fierce against perceived antisemitism on the left while lenient toward the right. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in a column by Daniel Rotstein, takes a more theoretical angle, criticizing a rhetorical formula that never mentions protecting Jewish life without pairing it with Muslim or Palestinian life, likening this to how "All Lives Matter" diluted Black Lives Matter's specific claims, and arguing it serves to obscure concrete antisemitic danger. Der Spiegel offers three distinct angles: an unsigned news piece makes Die Linke politician Vanessa Emde a concrete case study, noting how her extreme anti-Israel positions and ties to Hamas-sympathizing figures have become central to Berlin's coalition talks; a brief editorial insists that finding a clear stance on Israel need not be as complicated as German political discourse makes it; and in a column, Susanne Beyer argues that empathy for both Israelis and Palestinians is not contradictory, criticizing Netanyahu's conduct and illegal settlements while defending Israel's right to exist and to respond after October 7, and faulting Die Linke in Berlin for failing to articulate a clear position.

Sources: Der Spiegel, Die Welt, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (8)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 4 — "Eine Haltung zu Israel zu finden,…"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 6 — "Empathie für Israel, Empathie für Palästina"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 36 — "Arm, aber nicht arm an Dramen…"

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "„Und das ist der Punkt, an…"

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "Wie Trotzkisten bei der Linkspartei mitmischen"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9 — "Wenn wieder beiläufig vom „Schuldkult“ gesprochen…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 19 — "Lüge mit Nebenwirkungen (Gastbeitrag über Welt/Kubitschek)"

Security & Conflict

3 sources · 2 languages

Starshield/Starlink restrictions hurting Ukraine's air defence

All three papers report Zelensky's claim that throttled speeds on Elon Musk's Starshield system are undermining Ukraine's ability to intercept Russian drones, but each frames it differently. The Daily Telegraph, in Emily Smith's report, foregrounds Zelensky's blunt accusation that the curbs are "helping the Russians kill more Ukrainians" and situates the story within broader US-Ukraine friction over military technology support. The Globe and Mail, in Steven Chase's piece, offers the most technical detail - explaining how speed restrictions prevent Ukraine from catching jet-powered Shahed drones in time - and widens the lens to include Emmanuel Macron's argument that Europe must guarantee its own security rather than depend on the United States, alongside Zelensky's appeal for more missiles, military aid and sanctions. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung embeds Zelensky's complaint about restrictions in occupied territories within a larger war narrative, pairing it with Putin's rejection of any foreign troop presence after a potential peace deal and the EU's pledge of further sanctions, treating the Starshield issue as one thread in a broader diplomatic and military picture rather than a standalone story.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail
Citations (3)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Domestic Politics 3 sources · 2 languages

Pedro Sánchez's political resilience in Spain

Der Spiegel, in three pieces treated here as a single German voice, builds a layered portrait of Sánchez: a leader who has turned himself into an international progressive icon by standing up to Trump and Netanyahu and recognizing Palestine, even as his domestic position erodes amid corruption allegations, a housing crisis, a deadly train disaster, and personal attacks on his family. One of these pieces, bylined José Bautista and Steffen Lüdke, stresses how Sánchez is trying to turn his clash with Washington into a political asset - a former confidant describes him as practicing "judo," using his opponents' own strength against them - even as he struggles increasingly to contain pressures at home. Konrad Yakabuski, in a column in The Globe and Mail, takes a far more critical line, arguing that Sánchez's eight years of "ultraprogressive" governance have deeply divided Spain and that his snap-election gamble is backfiring amid the rail disaster, corruption scandals, and a migration surge that is boosting the far-right Vox party. The Economist offers a markedly different angle, focusing less on Sánchez's persona than on polling and electoral mechanics: one piece notes that Spain's social democrats are hoping he can repeat his 2023 feat of outperforming poll predictions, while the other examines the general reliability of polling and observes that Spain's right-wing parties currently appear positioned to win a majority over his coalition. The result is a contrast between Der Spiegel's emphasis on Sánchez's personal and international drama, Yakabuski's sharply critical political framing, and The Economist's more analytical, methodology-focused approach.

Sources: Der Spiegel, The Economist, The Globe and Mail
Citations (6)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 56 — "Der letzte Linke"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 57 — "Sánchez müsste nun die richtigen Worte…"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 58 — "Pedro Sánchez zwischen Trump-Konflikt und innenpolitischer…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 222 — "Spain's Pedro Sánchez and poll-defying politics"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 223 — "Polling accuracy and Spain's political outlook"

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Society & Culture 3 sources · 2 languages

Exclusion of Russian athletes from international competitions

All three sources cover the same underlying dispute - Canada's refusal to grant entry visas to Russian hockey players ahead of the world junior championship, despite a Court of Arbitration for Sport ruling permitting their participation - but each frames it differently. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in a piece by Bernd

Schwickerath, offers a factual account of the resulting diplomatic and sporting crisis, noting Canada's visa refusal and several nations' boycott of the schedule. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in an article by Johannes Aumüller, takes a critical angle toward the German government, arguing that Berlin, despite presenting itself as a staunch supporter of Ukraine and critic of Russia, is wavering and avoiding a firm stance on denying visas to Russian athletes, preferring to push the decision into the political realm rather than follow Canada's firmer example. The Globe and Mail instead centers the Russian response, reporting that hockey federation president Vladislav Tretiak is threatening to seek compensation from Canada and Germany and to push for relocating or cancelling the tournament, framing the episode from the perspective of Russia's grievance against the exclusion.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail, Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (3)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 32

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 38

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 22

Domestic Politics 3 sources · 1 language

US political fallout from Iran war - Hegseth impeachment push

The Economist offers the most detailed institutional analysis, running across several pieces that trace how Democrats tried to use both the impeachment vote against Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth and the War Powers Resolution as tools to end US military involvement in Iran, only to fall short on both fronts: the impeachment vote failed by a narrow margin partly because several Democratic members missed it, while any funding cutoff faces the structural obstacle that Democrats lack the votes and courts tend to defer to the president on war matters. The Economist also stresses the wider political stakes, citing exit polls showing the Iran war was decisive in Trump's party losing the midterms, and frames the fight as a preview of further battles over war powers. The Daily Telegraph, in Roland Oliphant's analysis, takes a different angle, portraying Hegseth as Washington's convenient scapegoat while arguing the real responsibility for the Iran war debacle lies with Trump, and that Hegseth's political survival hinges on internal administration factionalism rather than on the merits of the case against him. In contrast, in her column for the Los Angeles Times, Anita Chabria turns her criticism not on Hegseth or Trump but on the Democrats themselves, arguing that their failure to show up for the impeachment vote exposed serious leadership and messaging failures at a moment when public opinion was on their side.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Economist, Los Angeles Times

Citations (6)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 106 — "Democrats' strategy for ending the war…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 107 — "Impeachment push against Hegseth over Iran…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 108 — "Congress's limited leverage over Trump's Iran…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 109 — "Democrats' strategy for ending the war…"

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 19

Diplomacy & International Relations

3 sources · 1 language

UK-EU relations and Burnham's 'reset'/rejoin debate

Coverage of Burnham's EU "reset" splits sharply along source lines. The Daily Telegraph combines straight reporting on the Prime Minister's push for EU cooperation on small-boat migration with a barrage of hostile opinion pieces: in a letter to The Daily Telegraph, Roger J Arthur calls Burnham's reset proposal a subversive attempt to re-subjugate UK sovereignty to EU law without a British veto; Sir Bill Cash warns that any enthusiasm for rejoining weakens Britain's negotiating hand and invites slavery reparations claims; Maurice Leyland Bradbury attacks Lord Cameron for abandoning the Brexit fight; and Malcolm Webberley points to unrest in France, Spain and Germany as proof that Europe itself is in disarray. In a separate column for The Daily Telegraph, Julian Jessop argues the reset deal offers negligible economic benefit - a mere 0.4% GDP boost - for a significant surrender of post-Brexit freedoms. The Economist, by contrast, treats Burnham's intervention as a genuine political turning point, running a series of pieces describing how he has broken a Westminster taboo and opened a formal "Rejoin" debate, detailing splits within cabinet and Parliament, and framing Britain's position as squeezed between the US, EU and China; it further warns that Conservative and Reform UK pledges to quit the European Convention on Human Rights could trigger serious trouble and unravel existing trade arrangements. The Guardian focuses on the practical political stakes: one report presents the Prime Minister as confident a "win-win" deal with the EU is achievable, while another reveals cabinet anxiety that reopening the debate could hand an advantage to Nigel Farage's Reform UK. A further Guardian report, bylined by Jasper Jolly, narrows in on a concrete commercial dispute - carmakers lobbying to delay EV tariffs - adding a trade-specific angle that is largely absent from the more principle-driven arguments in The Daily Telegraph and The Economist.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Economist, The Guardian

Citations (15)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "Burnham asks EU to help tackle…"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Lord Cameron should reflect on his…"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Burnham's EU reset criticized"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Burnham's naivety on EU and reparations"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Europe in disarray"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 23 — "Brace yourselves: this EU 'reset' will…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 187 — "Andy Burnham has ignited the Rejoin…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 188 — "Andy Burnham's EU rejoining gambit"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 190 — "Britain's Brexit rejoin debate gathers pace"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 191 — "Andy Burnham has ignited the rejoin…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 192 — "Britain's Tories want even more Brexit"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 193 — "Britain's Brexit choice: closer EU ties…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "'Win-win' deal can be done with…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 8 — "Burnham's EU reset plans raise concern…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 32 — "UK car firms seek two-year delay…"

Security & Conflict 3 sources · 1 language

Bomb threat hoaxes against European schools - hybrid warfare

All three sources - each in signed pieces - report on a wave of hoax bomb-threat emails sent to thousands of schools across Italy, Britain, Northern Ireland, Ireland and Scotland, but they differ in how confidently they attribute the campaign to a deliberate hybrid-warfare strategy, implicitly linked to Russia. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in a piece by Matthias Rüb and Johannes Leithäuser, frames the threats as part of a sustained campaign against Italy that also included earlier cyberattacks on air traffic and refrigeration systems, strongly suggesting coordinated hostile action. Neue Zürcher Zeitung, in a column by Luzi Bernet, focuses on Italy's domestic vulnerability, quoting the Italian defense minister's warning that the country stands "without a shield" against hybrid warfare, and highlights the political debate and cross-party security coordination the episode triggered. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a piece by Max Muth, takes a more cautious angle, posing the episode as an open question - "a stupid prank or hybrid war?" - and citing authorities who suspect the attackers were not targeting specific schools or countries at all but simply aiming to sow general chaos.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (3)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Trade & Economics 3 sources · 1 language

German growth and budget policy under Merz coalition

Coverage of this topic comes entirely from German-language outlets, each framing the Merz coalition's fiscal course differently. In the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Julia Löhr writes in a sharply critical column that the coalition is pursuing the "opposite of growth policy" - making costly promises it cannot keep, pushing skilled workers and companies abroad, and refusing to cut spending despite expert warnings, going so far as to warn of looming "economic collapse." Alongside this, a separate factual report in the same paper documents how the Christian Democrat–SPD coalition softened planned savings - delaying a plastic tax and reversing cuts to housing benefit and child allowances - funded partly through new debt that will burden future budgets, citing a state finance minister's criticism that the measures favor particular groups while adding costs. Neue Zürcher Zeitung, in a column by Malte Fischer, relays the German Council of Economic Experts' warning that without consolidation Germany's debt ratio could approach 100% of GDP by 2040, driven by defense spending, interest costs and expanding social security, and advocates cutting subsidies and social spending and reforming pensions and healthcare rather than raising taxes - a more detached, expert-driven analysis than Löhr's alarmed personal tone. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a column by Henrike Roßbach, also addresses the budget negotiations and domestic tax policy, but without a notable international or comparative angle.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (4)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Das Gegenteil von Wachstumspolitik"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Union und SPD einigen sich in…"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 24

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Domestic Politics 3 sources · 1 language

Stephen Miller's promotion and immigration policy

All three outlets cover Stephen Miller's elevation to White House chief of staff, but each frames its significance differently. The Guardian, in a report by Adam Gabbatt, offers a straightforward factual account of the appointment itself, including Miller's effusive praise of Trump, alongside concerns voiced by Democrats and some Republicans that he will continue pursuing a hardline immigration agenda. In a column for The Globe and Mail, Stephen Holmes argues that the promotion - coming despite Miller's deportation crackdown having cost Republicans the midterms - reveals that Trump's underlying goal is not law enforcement but defining who "belongs" in America, prioritizing a vision of racial and cultural exclusion over electoral self-interest. The Los Angeles Times, in reporting by Sonja Sharp, focuses on the institutional stakes: Miller's new role expands his power to pursue hardline enforcement and attacks on press freedom and judicial authority, though the article notes that recent court rulings and a Democratic-controlled Congress could constrain his agenda, citing critics who compare his tactics to those of autocrats in Turkey and Hungary.

Sources: The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times

Citations (3)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5

Migration & Society

3 sources · 1 language

Aggressive US immigration enforcement under Trump

These five pieces, from three American newspapers, approach the same enforcement surge from distinct angles. Los Angeles Times, in reporting by Valerie Gonzalez and Tim Sullivan, stresses the human scale of the crackdown, noting that ICE arrests of asylum seekers, students and children continue unabated even after Trump himself suggested the policy was "too tough," and highlights the fear and family separation this causes. USA Today, in two investigative pieces led by Trevor Hughes with various co-writers, focuses instead on the administrative and financial fallout of the expansion: the Department of Homeland Security's purchase of massive new detention facilities - including a planned 10,000-bed "mega center" in Georgia - without adequate infrastructure planning or due diligence, wasting tens of millions of dollars and triggering local opposition even in Trump-supporting communities, ultimately forcing a partial collapse of the initiative. The Washington Post contributes two further angles: one unsigned report warns that ICE's rapid hiring drive has outpaced background checks, leaving armed officers with troubling misconduct histories deployed before their fitness was confirmed, while a separate piece by Luke Parker personalizes the issue through the prolonged detention of an Ethiopian-born pharmacy instructor in Oklahoma despite a pending habeas corpus petition. Together, the Los Angeles Times emphasizes the human toll, USA Today the bureaucratic and financial mismanagement, and The Washington Post bridges institutional critique of ICE's hiring practices with an individual case illustrating its consequences.

Sources: Los Angeles Times, USA Today, The Washington Post

Citations (5)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1 — "Officials: ICE detention plan wasted millions"

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "ICE's $1 billion warehouse detention plan…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16 — "A badge, a gun and an…"

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 36 — "Pharmacy instructor remains held at an…"

Trade & Economics 2 sources · 2 languages

Corporate/tech espionage and investment risk

The two sources approach economic espionage from markedly different angles. In her column in The Daily Telegraph, Izabella Kaminska takes a practical, present-day investor's perspective, arguing that behavioural red flags - unusual personal relationships cultivated with key executives, opaque sales channels, or corporate audacity - can signal espionage risks that conventional financial analysis misses entirely; she illustrates this with the Nvidia-Jensen Huang affair, the Wirecard scandal, and Israel's pager operation against Hezbollah, framing espionage as a concrete, underpriced risk to portfolios today. By contrast, in his column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Joachim Käppner adopts a historical and somewhat contrarian lens, arguing that economic espionage is "the oldest game in the world," practised by virtually every power from Byzantium to Venice, Portugal, Britain and the Soviet bloc, and suggesting that Western moral condemnation of espionage as a uniquely authoritarian vice is itself somewhat hypocritical given this long, universal history. Where Kaminska urges vigilance and new analytical tools for investors facing a live threat, Käppner steps back to relativize the moral framing, situating current China-West tensions within a much longer continuum of statecraft.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (2)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 23

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Security & Conflict

2 sources · 2 languages

Iran accused of cyberattacks on refrigeration systems (France, Belgium)

The Economist provides the core reporting on this story, running two articles that describe France accusing Iran's Revolutionary Guards of orchestrating cyberattacks on supermarket refrigeration systems, with the French foreign minister branding it an act of "unprecedented aggressiveness" that destroyed tens of millions of euros worth of goods and threatened food security. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung adds a geographic dimension, reporting that Belgian security services now also suspect possible links to known Iranian actors, though its tone is notably more measured, stressing caution and warning against public panic rather than echoing the sharper French accusations. The Economist separately folds the episode into a broader analytical argument about "global bullies," where the brazenness of the attack on French supermarkets is cited as evidence that Iran, alongside Trump-era America, China and Russia, now wields deliberate unpredictability as a tool of intimidation, with rogue actors no longer caring whether they get caught.

Sources: The Economist, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (4)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "France accuses Iran of cyber-attacks on…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5 — "France accuses Iran of cyberattack on…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 228 — "Global bullies have turned uncertainty into…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Diplomacy & International Relations

2 sources · 2 languages

Xi Jinping's vision for a China-centric world order

Coverage of this topic comes almost entirely from The Economist, which runs a cluster of pieces functioning as a single sustained analytical voice. The core argument is that Xi Jinping's slogan of a "community with a shared future" sounds soft but is backed by real technological and economic muscle, masking an assertive bid to reshape the world order around Chinese pre-eminence. One piece elaborates that the doctrine's vague content, more a general wish list than an operable plan, ultimately boils down to a simple demand: recognition of China's pre-eminence and deference from other states even when Chinese behavior harms their interests. Another angle reframes the "shared future" rhetoric not as a bold new vision but as a rebranding of a long-standing, conservative, self-interested non-interference doctrine, one that has in practice enabled partners like Russia to act aggressively, and which becomes more consequential as Chinese power grows, especially over Taiwan. Alongside this, two further Economist pieces turn to Wang Huning, the party's chief ideologue, and his warnings about "great changes unseen in a century" - from AI disruption and US-led protectionism to inequality, demographic decline and eroding social control - arguing that rather than steering history, the party risks becoming its victim, and that the leadership's answer is tighter control rather than reform, a strategy the analysis questions will succeed. Finally, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in an article by Jochen Stahnke, offers a distinct domestic angle: rather than addressing the global vision, it examines the surprise promotion of General Zhang Shengmin to the Politburo as Xi's move to secure a loyal military ally amid a purge of top generals, reinforcing Xi's emphasis on discipline, party loyalty and anti-corruption control over the army.

Sources: The Economist, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (9)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 84 — "Xi Jinping's plan for a China-centric…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 98 — "Xi Jinping's chief ideologue is worried"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 99 — "Wang Huning's Warning: The Party Risks…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 100 — "Xi Jinping's chief ideologue is worried"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 101 — "Xi Jinping’s plan for a China-centric…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 102 — "Chaguan: Xi's 'shared future' doctrine examined"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 103 — "Decoding Xi's 'shared future' and China's…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 104 — "Xi Jinping's plan for a China-centric…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10

Domestic Politics 2 sources · 2 languages

Dutch coalition crisis over tax policy

Both sources cover the same Dutch coalition crisis but from different vantage points. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung emphasizes the substance of the dispute, highlighting how the VVD felt "ambushed" by a tax deal on wealthy capital gains struck between its coalition partners and left-wing opposition parties, and quotes the claim that the resulting arrangement is substantively bad for the Netherlands.

The Washington Post instead frames the story around Prime Minister Rob Jetten personally, reporting his admission that his struggling three-party minority coalition needs a "serious fresh start" and noting the looming possibility of new elections. Where the German outlet stresses the policy rupture between coalition partners, the American paper centers on the leadership and political survival angle.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Washington Post
Citations (2)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 18

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Security & Conflict

2 sources · 1 language

Iranian espionage against journalists in UK

Both newspapers cover the same trial - the conviction of two Iranian-origin men for surveilling Iran International journalists in London on behalf of Iranian intelligence - but frame it differently. The Daily Telegraph foregrounds the defendants' status as illegal migrants, noting they had entered the UK unlawfully, and offers reassurance that they were stopped before any attack could occur. The Guardian, in Rajeev Syal's report, situates the case within a broader pattern of transnational repression, describing it as part of a systematic policy whereby hostile states hire "proxies" to target dissidents abroad, quoting the characterization that eliminating critics overseas is a staple policy of the Islamic republic.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Guardian
Citations (2)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 11

Security & Conflict 2 sources · 1 language

US soldier arrested for spying for Russia in UK / US aircraft withdrawal over Iran threat

Both sources report the underlying events factually, but with different emphasis. The Guardian focuses almost entirely on the espionage case, quoting an official assessment that the alleged conduct of a senior soldier entrusted with sensitive information is a serious matter, and highlighting the close UK-US counterintelligence collaboration that uncovered the insider threat. The Economist, by contrast, treats the Russian spying arrest as only the opening of a broader story, pivoting to the withdrawal of American aircraft from a second UK air base amid fears of a possible Iranian attack, tying this to an earlier redeployment of bombers and separate criminal charges against alleged Iranian operatives. Where The Guardian deepens the internal security and intelligence dimension of the Russia case, The Economist widens the frame to the external Iranian threat and the resulting US-UK military posture.

Sources: The Economist, The Guardian

Citations (2)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 19

Technology & Media 2 sources · 1 language

Potential AI investment bubble

Coverage of this topic splits between two distinct lenses. The Economist takes a financial-structural view of the risk: one piece argues that current AI investment levels display classic hallmarks of a speculative bubble likely to burst, while another details how SoftBank's debt-fuelled bets across chips, AI models, robotics and infrastructure are faltering simultaneously, raising real doubts about its ability to service its borrowings. Building on this same thesis of receding over-optimism about AI hardware, The Economist also shows investors rotating into Indian IT services firms, whose shares are rallying as excessive pessimism about them unwinds. The Guardian, in two columns by Heather Stewart, frames the story in political and social terms instead: she argues that recent US midterm results reflected a public backlash against the costs of unchecked AI datacentre expansion and the outsized wealth of tech leaders, and suggests the vote may be checking what she calls the AI "broligarchy," thereby accelerating a market reckoning with inflated valuations.

Sources: The Economist, The Guardian

Citations (5)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14 — "Why you should expect an AI…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 241 — "SoftBank's AI bet unravels"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 284 — "India's tech stocks rally as AI…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 45 — "Has people power at the ballot…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 46 — "AI backlash fuels Democrat midterm wave…"

Technology & Media

2 sources · 1 language

AI as a tool for cyber-defence

Four pieces in The Economist, all by Anne Neuberger, a former NSA and White House cybersecurity official, push a consistent and urgent argument: critics of AI dwell too much on its dangers while ignoring how vulnerable existing systems already are, and defenders should therefore deploy AI aggressively and quickly. Across her columns she contends that AI disproportionately benefits defenders - helping detect intrusions by state hackers such as Chinese actors, protecting critical infrastructure like power grids and water systems through digital twins and rapid patching, and enabling international cooperation such as the International Counter Ransomware Initiative - but she stresses this advantage only holds if governments act with urgency and coordinate globally. The Guardian offers a markedly different angle: reporting on warnings from the UK's National Cyber Security Centre, it frames AI less as a defensive opportunity and more as part of an escalating, dangerous threat landscape, tying the surge in attacks to geopolitical rivalries - Russia's hybrid warfare against Europe, North Korean hacking, and even breaches of smart devices like commercial fridges and Finnish government systems. Where The Economist, through Neuberger, offers an optimistic, action-oriented call to harness AI for defence, The Guardian conveys a more alarmed picture of a deteriorating cyber landscape in which AI is entangled with broader geopolitical danger rather than a clear solution to it.

Sources: The Economist, The Guardian

Citations (5)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 42 — "Defenders, unleash thyselves!"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 43 — "AI will help cyber-defenders more than…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 44 — "AI Can Help Defend Critical Infrastructure…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 45 — "AI sceptics focus on the wrong…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 20

Trade & Economics 2 sources · 1 language

Paraguay banking scandal and president's downfall

Coverage of this crisis is dominated by The Economist, which devotes three separate pieces to it, alongside one report from The Guardian. The Economist builds a layered picture: one article traces how the digital bank Ueno, linked to an ally of President Santiago Peña, went from a symbol of prosperity to the center of a crisis after regulators seized it on November 3rd, with investigators now probing Peña's own assets. A second Economist piece centers on the political fallout - Peña's rapid downfall, the arrest of central bank officials, and infighting with former president Horacio Cartes - while stressing the economic toll on depositors and pensioners. A third Economist article widens the lens to institutional stakes, reporting that the scandal has damaged trust in the central bank's independence, risks deterring foreign investment and remittances, and has become a political liability for the ruling Colorado Party ahead of the 2028 election, quoting a local economist from the think-tank CADEP. The Guardian, by contrast, focuses on the more dramatic and human dimension, reporting the president's house arrest following his impeachment and the freezing of bank accounts for roughly 60% of the adult population - about 2.9 million people - emphasizing the crisis's immediate impact on ordinary citizens' daily lives over institutional or investment implications.

Sources: The Economist, The Guardian

Citations (4)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 137 — "How Paraguay's digital bank became a…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 140 — "Paraguay's Ueno Bank Scandal Topples President…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 141 — "Paraguay's banking scandal shakes trust in…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5

Diplomacy & International Relations

2 sources · 1 language

US-Israel relations fraying after midterms and Iran war

The Economist provides the bulk of the coverage, running several related pieces that trace how Republicans, led by Trump and Vance, are blaming the Israel relationship and the Iran war for their midterm losses. Beyond this partisan framing, The Economist pushes into concrete consequences: it reports that Israel's political support is eroding across both parties over Gaza, Lebanon and Iran, putting the renewal of the $3.8bn annual US military aid package in doubt after Netanyahu reportedly agreed with Trump to end the current arrangement without a replacement ready. A further Economist piece downplays the financial stakes - noting American aid is barely half a percent of Israel's GDP - while stressing that the real cost would be diplomatic, exposing Israel to sanctions and UN pressure and eroding its international standing. Another Economist piece pins much of the blame on Netanyahu himself, arguing his hardline policies and hard-right coalition have become "toxic in America" even as structural ties like intelligence-sharing endure. The Guardian frames the story more broadly as the collapse of a decades-old bipartisan consensus rather than a Republican-specific problem. In her Guardian analysis, Alice Speri argues the midterms delivered an unambiguous rejection of pro-Israel political orthodoxy, with pro-Palestinian candidates winning widely and even Trump conceding that support for Israel has become a political liability amid the Gaza war. Where The Economist concentrates on intra-Republican fallout and the policy and financial risks to Israel, The Guardian situates the shift within a wider transformation of American political culture, in which unconditional support for Israel can no longer be assumed across either party.

Sources: The Economist, The Guardian

Citations (7)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 146 — "Republicans blame Israel for their defeat"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 150 — "Republicans blame Israel for their defeat"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 151 — "Israel's falling favour in America and…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 152 — "Israel's financial reckoning with waning American…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 153 — "Republicans blame Israel for their defeat"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10 — "A political liability: US-Israel relations reset"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "A liability: Trump's midterm rebuke marks…"

Technology & Media 2 sources · 1 language

Siemens' industrial AI strategy and regulatory risk

The two articles approach Siemens' industrial AI push from distinct angles. In his column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Markus Frühauf focuses on regulatory risk, arguing that while CEO Roland Busch sees enormous growth potential in Siemens' partnership with Nvidia on industrial AI, he must reckon with the danger that autonomous hacking attacks carried out by AI agents could trigger a political backlash and lead to stricter regulation that threatens those ambitions. By contrast, a report in Süddeutsche Zeitung by Caspar Busse centers on corporate strategy and financial performance, covering Siemens' spin-off of its Healthineers medical-technology unit and record results driven by AI and data-center demand, while noting that Busch downplays any impact from Nvidia's leadership crisis on the partnership, insisting existing projects continue unaffected. Where Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung warns of a looming political-regulatory threat to Siemens' AI strategy, Süddeutsche Zeitung paints a more upbeat picture of a business thriving despite turbulence at its key partner.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (2)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 26

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Energy & Environment

2 sources · 1 language

Africa's solar energy revolution

Both sources cover the rapid rise of solar power in Africa, but from different vantage points. The Economist takes a continent-wide, macro view, framing the phenomenon as a "vast and speedy" revolution sweeping across Africa and emphasizing its broader implications for development. By contrast, Yinka Ibukun's article in the Los Angeles Times narrows the lens to Nigeria specifically, offering a ground-level, consumer-driven account of how high fuel prices, unreliable grid infrastructure, and cheap Chinese solar technology are pushing households and businesses to abandon gasoline generators in favor of solar panels. Where The Economist paints the big-picture trend, the Los Angeles Times illustrates the on-the-ground mechanics driving it, grounded in individual consumer choices.

Sources: The Economist, Los Angeles Times

Citations (2)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 146

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Diplomacy & International Relations 2 sources · 1 language

Melania Trump's diplomatic role in Ukraine ceasefire

Both newspapers cover Melania Trump's unexpected role in brokering a six-day ceasefire in the occupied Ukrainian town of Oleshky, but they diverge sharply in tone. The Los Angeles Times, in a report by Darlene Superville, frames the episode largely as a positive humanitarian achievement, presenting the ceasefire as enabling civilian evacuations and aid deliveries, and situates Melania's public prominence within the broader context of the midterms and her upcoming TV premiere - without probing deeply into her motives or the credibility of her account. The Guardian's Andrew Roth takes a more skeptical, critical angle, noting that both Moscow and Kyiv have showered Melania with unusual praise even though her own account of her involvement "strains credibility," and suggesting that this mutual flattery serves a strategic purpose for both sides - keeping her, and the volatile Trump administration, onside - against the backdrop of a bitter Trump-Zelenskyy feud and a scandal over aides' Russia business dealings. Where the Los Angeles Times tells a story of successful humanitarian diplomacy, The Guardian exposes the more complicated political calculations behind the praise.

Sources: The Guardian, Los Angeles Times
Citations (2)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 32

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Security & Conflict 2 sources · 1 language

German intelligence services reform

All three articles cover the German government's plan to expand the powers of the BND and the domestic intelligence agency Verfassungsschutz, but they differ in emphasis and stance. Die Welt, in a report by Lennart Pfahler, offers a straightforward factual account of the plan - expanded digital surveillance, active measures against cyberattackers, authorization to use weapons, and the recruitment of minors as informants - framing it as a necessary response to hybrid warfare and international terrorism while noting parliamentary opposition without taking a side. Süddeutsche Zeitung provides two complementary angles: an unsigned-style news report by Markus Balser and Roland Preuß focuses on how agents would gain the ability to conduct offensive sabotage and cyber operations against Russia, China and Iran, alongside an examination of new oversight mechanisms and opposition criticism about potential abuse. In a separate column for Süddeutsche Zeitung, Roland Preuß goes further and stakes out a clear interpretive position, arguing that the expansion is justified given a wave of sabotage attacks attributed to Russia, and dismissing fears of a "Stasi 2.0" as overblown so long as parliamentary oversight and a clear line between police and intelligence work are maintained, explicitly stating that the governing parties "are not out to abolish democracy." Where Die Welt sticks to balanced reporting, Süddeutsche Zeitung combines factual coverage with an opinionated voice defending the reform while acknowledging its risks.

Sources: Die Welt, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (3)

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "Nur die Ruhe"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Lizenz zum Sabotieren"

Domestic Politics

2 sources · 1 language

Poland's nationalist Independence March and political tensions

The two German newspapers cover Poland's Independence Day march from notably different angles. Die Welt offers a largely factual account, reporting that several hundred thousand people, including President Nawrocki, marched under the slogan "The Pole is master in Poland," emphasizing opposition to mass immigration, and quoting celebratory calls for Polish national sovereignty without dwelling on the march's more contentious elements. By contrast, Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a piece by Viktoria Großmann, frames the march explicitly as a divisive event splitting Poland, highlighting the presence of far-right participants and noting a banner reading "Make Europe White Again" - a detail entirely absent from Die Welt's account. Süddeutsche Zeitung also situates the march within a broader narrative of escalating conflict between President Nawrocki and Prime Minister Tusk over the constitutional court and defense funding, presenting the holiday as one more front in Poland's internal political struggle rather than simply a nationalist celebration.

Sources: Die Welt, Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (2)

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Trade & Economics 2 sources · 1 language

Critique of state price controls economic policy

Two pieces in Der Spiegel, both by Michael Sauga, and a column in Die Welt by Jörg Krämer converge on skepticism toward expanding state control over prices, though each targets a somewhat different object. Krämer, writing in Die Welt, attacks the broader intellectual foundations of left-leaning economists such as Stephanie Kelton and Mariana Mazzucato, arguing they overestimate state capacity and underestimate how private investors react, a combination that has historically produced inflation and economic harm. Sauga, in his two Der Spiegel columns, focuses specifically on economist Isabella Weber's proposals for price controls and rent freezes as a remedy for rising living costs that fuel right-wing populism: he credits her diagnosis of the underlying social problem but rejects her prescription, pointing to historical failures in the United States, the Eastern Bloc, Venezuela, Mexico, and Berlin's rent cap, and argues instead for state-protected competition rather than direct price dictates, in the tradition of Eucken and Erhard's social market economy. Where Krämer widens the critique into a sweeping theoretical indictment, Sauga examines a concrete political proposal in Germany and the US while partially endorsing the diagnosis behind it.

Sources: Der Spiegel, Die Welt

Citations (3)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 50 — "Richtige Diagnose, falsche Therapie"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 51 — "Gegen staatliche Preisdiktate: Warum Preiskontrollen scheitern"

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Domestic Politics

2 sources · 1 language

Pope's criticism of Milei's austerity in Argentina

Coverage of this topic comes from two sources, each situating the Pope's remarks differently. The Guardian reports directly on Pope Leo XIV's rebuke of Javier Milei's harsh austerity measures, quoting the Pope's insistence that economic growth must benefit everyone and that leaders of a healthy democracy owe their citizens careful, respectful language - highlighting especially his concern for those who work hard yet still struggle to make ends meet. The Los Angeles Times, in Kate Linthicum's article, treats the criticism of Milei as one element within a broader account of the Pope's Latin America tour, which also covers his visit to Peru, his calls for justice tied to the authoritarian legacy of Fujimori, and the wider decline of Catholic affiliation amid the rise of evangelical Christianity in the region. Where The Guardian isolates the Argentina rebuke as a discrete political-economic story, the Los Angeles Times folds it into a larger narrative about the Catholic Church's shifting political and social role across Latin America.

Sources: The Guardian, Los Angeles Times

Citations (2)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Technology & Media 2 sources · 1 language

US pullback from data centers over environmental concerns

Both sources document growing pushback against data centers over resource and environmental strain, but from very different angles. In the Los Angeles Times, Blanca Begert reports on a quiet policy shift from within the system: even Vernon, California, a town long known as industry-friendly, is beginning to reconsider its welcoming stance toward data centers amid concerns over electricity use, water consumption, and environmental impact, quoting a local voice calling for regulation. The Guardian, by contrast, focuses on direct confrontation in Europe, reporting that Dutch climate activists from the group Geef Tegengas broke into a Microsoft datacentre construction site and clashed with police, as part of a wider European backlash against energy-intensive AI infrastructure. Where the Los Angeles Times frames the story as gradual, internal policy reconsideration, The Guardian frames it as confrontational, transnational activism.

Sources: The Guardian, Los Angeles Times
Citations (2)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1

Diplomacy & International Relations 2 sources · 1 language

Critique of Trump's foreign policy execution

Both pieces appear in American newspapers and broadly endorse a tough posture toward Iran, but they diverge sharply on where the problem lies. In the Los Angeles Times, columnist Paul Bloustein argues that Trump's strategic instincts - on tariffs to counter China and on striking Iran's nuclear program - were fundamentally sound, but that his ego, his post-strike bragging, and an unexplained delay in following through undermined the execution; Bloustein also faults Trump for handing peace negotiations to a vice president who had opposed the strikes. By contrast, in the Washington Post, Marc A. Thiessen is not concerned with Trump's temperament or style at all, but instead urges him to go further rather than ease off: Thiessen calls on Trump to achieve "total victory" by eliminating Iran's remaining leadership, destroying its nuclear and missile capabilities, and toppling the regimes in Iran, Venezuela and Cuba, framing this as the path to a historic, Reagan-like legacy. Where Bloustein locates the failure in Trump's personal conduct, Thiessen locates success in doubling down on an aggressive strategy.

Sources: Los Angeles Times, The Washington Post
Citations (2)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17

Trade & Economics

2 sources · 1 language

Critique of Trump's trade deficit obsession

Both sources criticize Trump's trade policy, but from quite different angles. In his column in USA Today, Merrill Matthews directly challenges the premise underlying Trump's approach, arguing that America's bilateral trade deficits are not the result of unfair "ripoffs" by trading partners but a natural consequence of differences in population size and income - a critique aimed at the economic logic itself. In a letter to The Washington Post, William R. Ayers takes a far more concrete and personal approach, describing how Trump's tariffs on international suppliers have disrupted the supply chains for classic cocktails, making ingredients like dry vermouth and gin scarce and expensive, and calling for the tariffs to be lifted. Where Matthews dismantles the deficit obsession on theoretical, demographic grounds, Ayers illustrates its tangible, everyday fallout for ordinary consumers.

Sources: USA Today, The Washington Post

Citations (2)

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

UK SAS legal 'witch hunt' controversy

All four pieces on this topic come from the Daily Telegraph, and together they present a unified front against what is framed as a legal "witch hunt" against SAS soldiers. In a news report, Danielle Sheridan covers Conservative leader Kemi Badenoch's call on Home Secretary Andy Burnham to end the legal investigations into alleged unlawful killings in Afghanistan, paired with a demand that Britain leave the European Convention on Human Rights. In a column for the Daily Telegraph, former British Army officer Tim Collins goes further, arguing the investigations rest on unsubstantiated hearsay and suggesting that in future conflicts airstrikes should be used instead of deploying special forces operators, to avoid exposing them to "lawfare." A separate, unsigned piece focuses specifically on the Haddon-Cave inquiry, arguing it is eroding the SAS's fighting strength and calling for the Legacy Act's protections to be upheld rather than replaced by Labour's Troubles legislation, which would reopen soldiers to prosecution. In another column for the Daily Telegraph, Simon Crowley sharpens the attack further, accusing politicians who never served in the military of lacking the backbone to defend soldiers, who he says are now less willing to undertake dangerous missions for fear of war crimes accusations. Across all four - two signed columns, one bylined news report and one unsigned piece - the consistent framing treats the legal scrutiny not as legitimate accountability but as an unjust and damaging campaign against the special forces.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph

Citations (4)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2 — "Badenoch tells Burnham to stop SAS…"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2 — "Special forces need protecting from a…"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Britain must defend its special forces"

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "SAS witch hunts"

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

UK mosque anti-Israel sermons controversy

Coverage of this topic rests on a single source: The Daily Telegraph reports that the Charity Commission found a London mosque had hosted two sermons it deemed "inflammatory and divisive," including references to "Zionists," in the wake of the October 7 attacks and the Southport riots, concluding that the mosque had breached its trustees' duties. The Daily Telegraph also notes the mosque's pushback, which frames the ruling as overzealous and a threat to religious freedom. With no other outlet covering the story, there is no competing emphasis or angle to compare it against.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph

Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 12

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Ukraine's underground war against Russia

This topic is covered by a single source. In The Daily Telegraph, Antonia Langford reports on a covert Ukrainian operation codenamed "Veles," in which soldiers fought inside decommissioned gas pipelines underground near Kupyansk. The piece offers a factual, almost dispatch-style account centered on the grueling 45-day ordeal endured by the troops, while also detailing the operation's tactical payoff - around 100 Russian soldiers killed and 30 captured - without any other outlet providing a competing or corroborating angle.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Assassinations of senior Russian officers

This topic is covered by a single source. The Daily Telegraph reports on a car bombing that killed a senior Russian military colonel in St Petersburg, situating the attack within a broader string of assassinations of high-ranking Russian officers over recent months, which have been claimed by or blamed on Ukraine's security services. The report emphasizes the political timing of the killing, noting it occurred while US envoys were in Moscow meeting Putin for peace talks, framing the bombing as a possible signal or attempt to influence the negotiations rather than as an isolated incident.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

English national identity and King Athelstan's legacy

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column for The Daily Telegraph, Neil O'Brien argues that the 1,100th anniversary of England's unification under King Athelstan is being quietly ignored by both government and schools, which he attributes to what he calls a campaign of demoralisation waged by left-wing elites embedded in Britain's cultural and educational institutions - elites he accuses of wanting either to erase English history or to reduce it to nothing but a catalogue of shame. He calls for a statue of Athelstan on London's Fourth Plinth and for proper national commemoration of this anniversary, framing the issue explicitly as part of a broader culture-war critique of the left. As no other source addresses this topic, no cross-source comparison is possible.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

UK Labour welfare reform debate

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, so there is no cross-source comparison to draw here. In his column for The Daily Telegraph, David Frost criticises Alan Milburn's welfare reform proposals, arguing they will cost billions without addressing the underlying incentive problems keeping young people out of work. He instead calls for cutting entitlements, as the Conservatives and Reform propose, contending that such a move would save £36 billion.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

Rise in UK migration since Brexit

This topic is covered by a single source. In an article for The Daily Telegraph, Tim Wallace reports that the UK's foreign-born population share has risen faster than in any other G7 country since Brexit, with migrants accounting for most employment growth, particularly in health and care sectors. The piece also carries a political edge, quoting Reform UK's Robert Jenrick, who blames successive Conservative governments for failing to control immigration and declares they "should never be forgiven." As the only source on this topic, the Telegraph article combines economic-demographic reporting with an explicitly critical political voice, without another outlet offering a contrasting or complementary framing.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 19

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

UK-India whisky tariff trade dispute

This topic is covered by a single source. In The Daily Telegraph, Hans van Leeuwen reports on a dispute between the UK and India over the classification of tariffs on Scotch whisky under the new bilateral free-trade deal, after dozens of containers were impounded by Indian authorities. The article frames the story primarily from the British commercial angle, stressing the economic stakes - a projected £1bn export windfall for Britain's whisky industry now at risk - and presenting the dispute as a potential blemish on the diplomatic achievement of the trade deal that took effect in July.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 21

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

Lawsuit against AI firms over existential risk

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, which reports that a coalition of consumer and safety advocacy groups has filed a lawsuit against leading AI companies - including Google, Meta, OpenAI and Anthropic - demanding a halt to the development of new models on the grounds that they could inflict catastrophic, uncontrollable harm on humanity. The report quotes the plaintiffs' argument that "no other industry is allowed to treat its own development of unsafe products - much less ones that could kill us all - as inevitable," framing the issue as a legal and public confrontation between existential safety concerns and the commercial interests of major tech firms. With no other source covering this story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 21

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

China's falling carbon emissions and motives

All the coverage of this topic comes from The Economist, but across several pieces it builds a multi-layered account of why China's carbon emissions are falling, with differing emphases on cause and significance. A recurring thread argues the drop is not driven by climate altruism but by self-interest: China's heavy investment in clean-tech industries, electric vehicles, and solar, wind, hydro and nuclear power primarily serves energy independence and industrial policy, and the same pieces urge other governments to embrace cheap Chinese clean technology rather than resort to protectionism. Another angle locates the shift in structural economic change - a property-sector bust that has cut demand for steel and cement and thus coal consumption - alongside more temporary factors such as a crackdown on coalmine safety. A separate piece broadens the frame to the global picture, arguing that the sharp 2026 fall in worldwide emissions, led by China, owes more to the Iran war's effect on oil and gas prices than to the diplomatic achievements of the COP31 summit, though it suggests this decline may prove durable because it is accelerating the structural shift toward EVs and renewables. Another report focuses on the diplomatic optics, noting China may use the emissions drop and its clean-tech exports to burnish its image at COP31. Finally, one piece strikes a more cautionary note, warning that grid and storage constraints on renewables could tempt local officials and state-owned firms to rush through dirty coal projects while they still can, undercutting the broader green transition.

Sources: The Economist

Citations (7)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14 — "China's emissions are falling. Thank self-interest"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 27 — "China's emissions are falling. Thank self-interest"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 28 — "A fall in carbon emissions driven…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 29 — "China's emissions are falling. Thank self-interest"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 86 — "China's Emissions Drop Offers Climate Summit…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 87 — "China's falling carbon emissions"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 91 — "China's carbon-dioxide emissions have begun to…"

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

AUKUS submarine base in Australia

All eight items on this topic come from the Economist, and in substance they represent a single extended piece of coverage recurring under different headlines and excerpts, so they can be treated as one voice. The Economist examines Australia's upgrade of the HMAS Stirling naval base to host American and British nuclear-powered submarines under AUKUS - America's first new submarine base abroad in over fifty years - stressing its strategic edge over Guam: out of range of most Chinese missiles yet closer to Asian waters. At the same time, the Economist highlights the gap between the official framing of foreign submarines merely "rotating" through the base and the reality that each American submarine will actually operate from Stirling for one to two years at a stretch, a discrepancy it calls a "sleight of hand." Alongside the strategic picture, the Economist repeatedly returns to the mismatch between AUKUS's promises and industrial reality: American and British shipyards are producing submarines far slower than required, raising genuine doubt about whether Australia will ever receive vessels of its own and risking a scenario in which it ends up with a nuclear-submarine base but no nuclear-powered submarines. The result is a dual framing in the Economist's coverage - an impressive buildup of military presence against China on one hand, and a sober warning of industrial shortfalls that could hollow out the pact on the other.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (8)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 64 — "Inside America’s first new submarine base…"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 65 — "Inside America’s first new submarine base…"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 66 — "AUKUS submarine base expansion at HMAS…"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 67 — "AUKUS submarine deal: Australia's nuclear-powered future"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 68 — "AUKUS remains controversial"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 69 — "AUKUS submarines and the new US…"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 70 — "AUKUS submarine base takes shape at…"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 71 — "Inside America's first new submarine base…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Indonesian political crisis - VP resignation

All four pieces on this topic come from The Economist, and together they read less as competing viewpoints than as a developing sequence of coverage on the same unfolding crisis. The first two articles, carrying nearly identical headlines, stick close to the core facts: Vice-President Gibran Rakabuming Raka's resignation following a

Supreme Court ruling that cast doubt on his educational eligibility, and a warning that the feud could pit the army and police against one another. The third piece broadens the lens, framing the episode as the unravelling of the governing alliance between President Prabowo and his predecessor Jokowi, and presents it as the source of deeper political uncertainty for Indonesia going forward. The fourth adds a more dramatic, on-the-ground dimension, detailing the arrest of a former police chief and Prabowo's order to deploy 21,000 troops to Jakarta the same evening, which shows how the political power struggle is translating into tangible security maneuvering. Taken together, The Economist's four reports build a progressively deeper picture - moving from what looks like a technical legal resignation to a broader crisis of governance rooted in rival loyalties within the security forces.

Sources: The Economist

Citations (4)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 64 — "Indonesia’s vice-president resigns, escalating a destabilising…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 72 — "Indonesia's vice-president resigns, escalating a destabilising…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 73 — "Indonesia's political unity unravels as Prabowo…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 74 — "Indonesia's vice-president resigns, escalating a destabilising…"

Diplomacy & International Relations

1 source · 1 language

China-Japan tensions over Taiwan remarks

All five articles on this topic come from a single source, The Economist, and together form essentially one sustained piece of coverage - with overlapping or near-duplicate versions - of the diplomatic crisis between China and Japan triggered by Japanese Prime Minister Takaichi's remarks suggesting Japan might use force to defend Taiwan. The Economist approaches the episode from several complementary angles rather than offering competing viewpoints. It documents China's retaliatory measures in detail - discouraging tourism, banning seafood imports, tightening export controls on dual-use items including rare earths, and cutting off most high-level government communication - while quoting a Japanese official who describes Beijing's message as a demand to "bend the knee," and noting that Japanese officials insist they have not retaliated in kind. At the same time, the magazine frames the episode within a broader, recurring question - "Can anyone fix the China-Japan relationship?" - arguing that the two countries need a trusted intermediary, pointing to historical go-betweens like Fukuda Yasuo, but cautioning that Donald Trump is poorly suited to that role. It further suggests Beijing intends to "make an example" of Japan to deter others from following Takaichi's lead on Taiwan, and notes that Russia has piled on additional pressure, leaving Tokyo increasingly isolated diplomatically. Since only one newspaper covers this topic, there is no cross-source disagreement here, only a multi-angled treatment of the same unfolding crisis by one publication.

Sources: The Economist

Citations (5)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 64 — "Can anyone fix the China-Japan relationship?"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 77 — "Can anyone fix the China-Japan relationship?"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 78 — "China-Japan Tensions Escalate Over Taiwan Remarks"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 79 — "China-Japan tensions over Takaichi's Taiwan remarks"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 80 — "Can anyone fix the China-Japan relationship?"

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

India's governance culture and public standards

This topic is covered by a single source. The Economist frames the issue as a cultural and institutional one, arguing that India's pervasive "chalta hai" mindset - a tolerance for "good enough" outcomes - is what keeps governance standards low. Notably, the piece does not place blame solely on officials or institutions but turns the critique back on ordinary citizens, suggesting that public complacency itself sustains mediocre administration. It balances this diagnosis with a more hopeful angle, profiling an official who is trying to raise standards through citizen engagement and technology, implying that change is possible if expectations shift.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (1)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 83

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

China's clean-tech exports to Southeast Asia

All three pieces come from The Economist and function less as competing viewpoints than as complementary angles on the same trend. Two articles, carrying nearly identical headlines, lay out the broad picture: China is redirecting its clean-tech exports toward South-East Asia as European governments erect protectionist barriers such as EV quotas, while governments across the region - from Laos to Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines - are welcoming the influx to rapidly expand renewable capacity, with little pushback. The third article narrows the focus to a specific driver: it shows how fighting around the Strait of Hormuz disrupted Gulf oil and gas supplies, sharply accelerating demand for Chinese solar panels, to the point that the Philippines became the world's second-largest buyer of Chinese solar panels in May. Where the first two pieces frame the story through the contrast between European protectionism and South-East Asian openness, the third frames it through an acute energy-security shock, underscoring that supply concerns outweigh any wariness about reliance on Chinese technology, even amid ongoing territorial disputes between some regional states and Beijing.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (3)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 92 — "China’s exports of clean tech to…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 93 — "Iran war supercharges South-East Asian solar…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 95 — "China's exports of clean tech to…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Democrats' congressional strategy to end Iran war

This topic is covered by only a single source. Rather than focusing on any Democratic strategy in Congress, The Economist frames Iran policy as one flashpoint in a broader Republican civil war: it reports that MAGA purists are vehemently opposed to continued involvement in the conflict in Iran, putting them at odds with Secretary of War Pete Hegseth, who narrowly survived an impeachment attempt. The article's emphasis is thus on intra-Republican fracturing over foreign policy - alongside disputes about chip exports to China and espionage fears - rather than on any opposition effort originating from Democrats.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (1)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 125

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Trump's tariff policy and Republican Party split

All three articles on this topic come from The Economist, and two of them are in fact the same piece republished under the identical headline, so they count as a single voice. Taken together, The Economist offers two complementary angles. One article warns that Trump's ideological commitment to tariffs, including a trade war that is unpopular with the public, risks splitting the Republican Party much as Grover Cleveland's gold-standard stance split the Democrats in 1896, and notes Trump seems certain to fight any congressional attempt to restrain his use of tariffs. The other, written after Democrats won control of Congress, argues that Trump's tariff and immigration agenda will now face new constraints from public opinion, the courts and Congress, likely pushing him toward compromise rather than confrontation - though his appointment of hardliner Stephen Miller suggests he may resist that pull. So while the first piece focuses on the intra-party risk of Trump's tariff zeal, the second weighs whether his dealmaking instincts will ultimately prevail over confrontation with a newly empowered Democratic Congress.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (3)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 130 — "Donald Trump has an unusual chance…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 286 — "The future of Trumponomics: compromise or…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 289 — "The future of Trumponomics: compromise or…"

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

US-UK tension over sanctions on Israeli settlers

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, in an opinion column by David Miller. Miller argues that the US threat of state trade sanctions against the UK, in response to the British government's sanctions on Israeli settlers, will prove ineffective because, in his view, Labour's hostility toward Israel is absolute and government ministers are indifferent to the possible economic fallout. This is a personal, critical take on the Labour government rather than institutional reporting by the newspaper, and with no other source addressing the issue, there is no cross-source comparison to draw.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Jordan's fear of jihadist resurgence

All four articles on this topic come from The Economist, and they are effectively variants of a single piece, so they should be treated as one voice. The Economist traces how Jordan's long-prized stability is being eroded by a resurgence of jihadist violence, pointing to several intertwined causes: the broader war involving Iran, jihadist currents spilling over from Syria, and public anger at Jordan's perceived role as a forward line of defense for Israel and the United States. The coverage describes a deadly attack on a funeral procession and the government's forceful military crackdown in response, while warning that the state's preference for repression over politics - "repression is easier than politics," as the piece puts it - risks backfiring by pushing dissent underground and fueling radicalization rather than containing it. The Economist also quotes local voices who object that "the war with Iran isn't our war, we shouldn't be part of it," capturing resentment over the kingdom's entanglement in conflicts not of its own choosing. Since no other outlet covers this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw here.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (4)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 146 — "Jordan is worried about a resurgence…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 154 — "Jordan is worried about a resurgence…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 156 — "Jordan's Rising Militancy"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 157 — "Jordan is worried about a resurgence…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Treason trials and opposition repression in Africa

All five pieces on this topic come from The Economist, and together they function less as competing accounts than as parts of a single multi-angle investigation into the same regional phenomenon. One article, headlined "Welcome to Africa's treason belt," appears twice but represents a single piece of coverage, serving as the framing overview of a "treason belt" stretching across East and Southern Africa. A second piece narrows in on the legal mechanism itself, arguing that the prosecution of Tanzanian opposition leader Tundu Lissu exemplifies how African autocrats increasingly prefer "lawfare" - weaponizing courts - over cruder repression. A third broadens the lens regionally, reading the clustering of treason and terrorism cases in Tanzania, Uganda, Rwanda, Mozambique and Zambia as the "stress response" of a distinctive hybrid authoritarian model now cracking as ruling parties abandon their liberal facades. A fourth shifts focus from the trials to the opposition's reaction, arguing that as elections across the continent grow less free, opposition leaders are turning from ballots to street protest, while entrenched regimes - haunted by memories of the Arab spring - respond to even mild dissent with repression and dubious prosecutions rather than genuine truth-seeking. The fifth closes the series by zooming in on concrete cases like Besigye and Lissu, arguing treason charges function as a political rather than legal tool precisely because they are non-bailable, warning that while effective at sidelining rivals in the short term, such repression risks storing up unrest or coups down the line. All five pieces share the same critical stance toward African autocrats; what differentiates them is mainly scope - moving from a general framing of the phenomenon, through legal and regional analysis, to the consequences for opposition movements and regime stability itself.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (5)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 146 — "Welcome to Africa's treason belt"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 158 — "Welcome to Africa's treason belt"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 159 — "Autocracy under strain in East and…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 160 — "Africa's opposition leaders turn from ballots…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 161 — "Treason trials: a great way of…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Colombia's populist president and crime crackdown

All five articles on this topic come from The Economist, so this is less a clash of competing outlets than a single publication's multi-angled dossier on Colombia's new populist president, Abelardo de la Espriella. Several of the pieces portray him as a theatrical "Tiger" whose aggressive, telegenic crackdown on drug lords and social-justice activists is building his popularity, even as The Economist repeatedly undercuts the showmanship by noting that results on the ground are "modest" - "essentially the same: captures, kills, seizures," as one analyst quoted in the magazine puts it. Alongside the security narrative, The Economist devotes separate attention to Colombia's fiscal crisis, including talks with the IMF over a loan potentially worth $20 billion, framing this structural problem as a harder, less glamorous challenge than the drug war. Another piece places de la Espriella within a broader international pattern, arguing he is following "Trump's playbook" of authoritarian-populist culture war and alignment with US anti-drug and anti-globalist priorities, while suppressing critics. Finally, The Economist also tracks the growing street opposition to his rule, noting the government's dismissal of protesters as a "small minority that wants to stop Colombia" - a characterization the magazine suggests is becoming increasingly difficult to sustain as the movement grows. Across the set, the throughline is a consistently skeptical Economist stance toward the gap between de la Espriella's populist showmanship and the deeper unresolved problems - fiscal, security, and political - that his government has yet to address.

Sources: The Economist

Citations (5)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 132 — "Colombia's El Tigre is taking no…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 133 — "Colombia's 'Tiger' Approaches 100 Days: Strongman…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 134 — "Colombia's new government battles crime and…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 135 — "Colombia's new president follows Trump's playbook"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 136 — "Colombia's El Tigre is taking no…"

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Europe's fiscal and welfare-state crisis

All four pieces on this topic come from The Economist, and rather than offering genuinely distinct viewpoints, they largely restate the same institutional argument from several angles: that Europe's generous social spending and pension systems have become fiscally unsustainable amid aging populations and high debt, and that fragmented, populist politics are blocking the consensus needed for reform. One piece extends the argument to warn that if governments cannot forge political majorities for difficult cuts, bond markets will eventually impose those choices in a crisis. Another narrows the focus to France as the most alarming case, citing Michel Barnier's description of the parliamentary climate as "pre-insurrectional," alongside comparisons to the Netherlands and Germany. The remaining pieces largely repeat the core framing - that Europeans want public spending levels they can no longer afford, and that fractured parliaments make fixing this nearly impossible - so this is best read as one outlet's sustained institutional position expressed across multiple articles rather than a debate among different sources.

Sources: The Economist

Citations (4)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 168 — "Can't pay, won't cut: Europe has…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 169 — "Europe's unaffordable welfare states"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 171 — "Europe's welfare states under fiscal strain"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 172 — "Europe has been living beyond its…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Teddy Riner's French presidential candidacy

This topic is covered by a single source, The Economist, which frames judo champion Teddy Riner's surprise entry into the French presidential race as an injection of energy into a contest otherwise dominated by populist extremes. The article highlights the possibility that Riner could siphon votes from Mélenchon's younger supporters, even as analysts remain skeptical of his actual prospects. It quotes Riner's own outsider pitch - that France needs common sense, firmness and justice rather than a professional politician reciting talking points - as central to his appeal.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (1)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 174

Diplomacy & International Relations · 1 source · 1 language

EU bureaucracy and regulation

This topic is covered only by The Economist, which frames the EU's regulatory apparatus with pointed irony: it argues that Brussels' bureaucracy has become so tangled that even efforts to cut red tape end up generating more of it, illustrated by a packaging law taking effect even as officials scramble to repeal it. Since no other source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - only The Economist's own critical framing of EU governance.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (1)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 185

Migration & Society · 1 source · 1 language

UK's net-zero migration trend

All three pieces on this topic come from The Economist, and rather than offering competing takes, they build a layered analysis of the same shift. One article poses the basic question of whether Britain is actually ready for "net-zero" migration - a demand once associated with the outlandish fringe views of Nigel Farage that now appears close to being realized, and The Economist asks whether the country is prepared for the consequences. A second Economist piece widens the lens, arguing Britain is on track to become a country of net emigration for the first time since 1993, framing this as proof that governments can indeed control migration levers when they choose to - while warning that this "success" will not satisfy critics, since small-boat crossings will loom proportionally larger within a shrinking total, and public attention is shifting from the flow of migration to the existing demographic stock. The third Economist article follows the political consequences of this shift, arguing that as net migration falls, debate is moving from limiting new arrivals toward actively deporting recent immigrants, with even moderate voters souring on past high immigration levels - though the public remains unwilling to accept the economic trade-offs that lower migration entails, as Christabel Cooper of the Labour-aligned think-tank ThinkLabour is quoted noting. Together, the three pieces progress from defining the phenomenon, to placing it in historical context, to tracing its immediate political fallout.

Sources: The Economist

Citations (3)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 209 — "Is Britain ready for net-zero migration?"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 210 — "Britain's net-zero migration moment"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 211 — "Britain's immigration debate shifts from arrivals…"

Diplomacy & International Relations

1 source · 1 language

Strategic ambiguity as a geopolitical weapon

All five articles on this topic come from The Economist, and in effect they represent only three distinct pieces: three of the entries are different renderings (headline, teaser and full text) of the very same article, which argues that both strong and weak powers alike - Iran, Russia, China and Trump-era America - deliberately cultivate uncertainty and ambiguity as tools of intimidation and leverage, abandoning the traditional reputation for reliability that once defined great powers, and points to Iran's brazen cyberattack on French supermarkets as proof that rogue states no longer fear getting caught. A separate Economist piece narrows this argument specifically to US-China relations, contending that both powers, once self-styled champions of a stable, rules-based trading order, now deliberately wield unpredictability as leverage - with Trump treating inconstancy itself as an instrument of American dominance. A third Economist article focuses more narrowly still on concrete trade and export-control measures, arguing that China has acted hypocritically: after years of complaining that America changes the rules whenever it fears losing, China has itself adopted long-arm laws and rare-earth export controls to pressure multinational companies into dependence and relocation. Together, the pieces move from a broad, principled framing of ambiguity as a global geopolitical weapon, to its specific application in US-China trade relations, to a concrete case study of China turning the very tactic it once decried into its own instrument of coercion.

Sources: The Economist

Citations (5)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 213 — "Global bullies have turned uncertainty into…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 225 — "Global bullies have turned uncertainty into…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 226 — "Strategic Ambiguity: America and China Learn…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 227 — "China's new long-arm rules: from grumbling…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 228 — "Global bullies have turned uncertainty into…"

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

UK North Sea defence against Russia

This topic is covered by a single source. The Daily Telegraph, in an article by Danielle Sheridan, reports on Britain's purchase of three mine-hunting ships from Norway as part of an effort to strengthen the defence of the North Sea against a Russian threat and bolster Nato's northern flank. The piece quotes an official framing the deal as reinforcing the ability to protect freedom of navigation, described as critical to both Britain's security and its economy, reflecting an institutional angle supportive of the defence investment as a necessary response to Russia.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Return of state asset confiscation as economic warfare

All four pieces on this topic come from The Economist, but together they form a multi-part package that approaches the return of state asset confiscation from distinct angles. One article anchors the discussion in the historical precedent of America's Alien Property Custodian during the First World War, treating wartime seizure of enemy-owned assets as the template for today's confiscations. A second, drawing on Nicholas Mulder's new book, concentrates specifically on the live policy dispute over frozen and potentially confiscated Russian assets amid the war in Ukraine, foregrounding the risks involved by citing Christine Lagarde's warning that such a seizure would "start breaking the international legal order" - an emphasis on legal, reputational and financial caution. A third article broadens the lens further back in history, arguing that property rights and state confiscation have always coexisted - from America's Founding Fathers to post-war Britain to decolonizing states in the Middle East and Asia - challenging the simplified story that secure property rights alone explain national prosperity. The fourth article turns to the present and widens the geographic scope beyond Russia, contending that the globalization-era norm of respecting foreign-owned property is ending, pointing to Russia's confiscation of Western firms' assets in retaliation, juntas in the Sahel, and the United States under Trump as parallel examples of states using seizure as a tool of statecraft. Taken together, the four pieces move from deep historical grounding to the contemporary Russia-specific dilemma to a broader claim of a global resurgence, rather than offering competing stances on a single event.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (4)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 293 — "The return of the snatch-and-grab state"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 294 — "The Age of Confiscation: Russia's frozen…"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 295 — "A history of confiscation: how states…"
The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 296 — "The Return of the Snatch-and-Grab State"

Trade & Economics
1 source · 1 language

Italy's exit tax on the wealthy

Both pieces come from The Economist and together form a single two-part treatment of the story rather than competing viewpoints. The first lays out the mechanics of Italy's draft exit tax: a 26% capital-gains levy on residents holding more than €800,000 in financial assets worldwide who leave the country, applying even if they have not sold those assets, with a base broad enough to include crypto and derivatives. The second shifts to a more critical, political framing, arguing that Giorgia Meloni's plan is poorly designed and driven by electoral calculation rather than sound policy - dismissing Italy's fear of being the only G7 country without such a tax as misplaced, and pointing to Germany's comparable system as a cautionary example of how such levies discourage entrepreneurial mobility. Where the first article presents the tax as a technical response to capital flight, the second reframes it as a move whose real purpose, in the magazine's words, is to avoid losing votes rather than losing the rich.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (2)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 277 — "Italy's exit tax"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 279 — "Italy's exit tax on the wealthy"

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

The right of states to exist - Israel and beyond

This topic is covered by a single source. In his column in the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Reinhard Müller argues that denying any state's right to exist, including Israel's, is a false and dangerous claim rooted in antisemitism. He contends that while peoples have a right to self-determination, this does not override the right of existing states to exist, and that this logic should be applied consistently to other cases as well, such as Germany and Ukraine. As no other source addresses this topic, there is no comparative framing to draw from additional outlets.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Elbit Systems withdraws German site plan

Both reports on Elbit Systems' withdrawal from its planned Sangerhausen site come from the same newspaper, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, and together function as a single institutional voice on the episode. The first piece sticks to the bare facts: the Israeli arms maker has dropped its plan after local protests but continues searching for other German locations, with a potential Bundeswehr contract still pending. The second article, covering the same event, broadens the frame by quoting politicians who describe the cancellation as a worrying precedent, linking it to the AfD's electoral success and opposition from Die Linke, the BSW, and anti-Israel groups, and warning that an unreliable political environment could deter future investors. So while the first article treats the episode as a local planning matter, the second situates it within a larger narrative about Germany's political climate toward foreign defense investment.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (2)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1 — "Rüstungsunternehmen zieht Pläne zurück"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3 — "Unternehmen verwirft Pläne für Sangerhausen"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Mélenchon's stance on German rearmament and NATO

This topic is covered by a single source - an article by Michaela Wiegel in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, which reports on French presidential candidate Jean-Luc Mélenchon's stance toward Germany and NATO. The piece frames Mélenchon as warning against German rearmament under Chancellor Merz as a direct threat to France, while portraying Franco-German defense cooperation as a sellout of French industrial interests. Mélenchon is quoted bluntly rejecting the idea that any country in Europe should build the continent's largest conventional army, and he is also described as pledging to pull France out of NATO's integrated command structures and to oppose French involvement in American-led wars. With no other outlet weighing in on this specific topic, there is no competing framing to compare - the sole article presents Mélenchon's sovereigntist, distrustful posture toward both Berlin and Washington without counterpoint from another newspaper.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

EU funding dispute for Ukraine and Merz's leadership

All three pieces on this topic come from Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, but each frames the dispute differently. In a column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Thomas Gutschker sharply criticizes Chancellor Merz for unilaterally pushing an ultimatum demanding a "fair contribution" from all EU states toward financing Ukraine without prior consultation, alienating Central and Eastern European states such as Slovakia, Hungary, Czechia and Bulgaria, and argues this risks derailing EU budget negotiations ahead of France's 2027 presidential election - an inward-looking critique of German leadership style. In a separate column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nikolas Busse broadens the lens outward, directing his sharpest criticism at Trump, arguing the American president is effectively acting as Putin's "willing helper" by pushing the Ukraine-aid and EU-budget issue onto the agenda in a way that lets Russia extract concessions while giving nothing back, and calls on Europeans to insist on participating directly in negotiations. The third article, by Alexander Haneke and Niklas Zimmermann, reports on the crude, vulgar rhetorical clash between Slovak Prime Minister Fico and Merz, contrasting it with the more measured approach taken by Czech Prime Minister Babiš and Hungarian opposition leader Magyar, while highlighting Fico's domestic political motives - supplying a personal-political backstory to a dispute that Gutschker treats as an institutional failure and Busse frames as part of a larger geopolitical problem involving US-Russia-Europe relations.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (3)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6 — "Wieder prescht Merz ohne Absprache vor"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10 — "Putins Helfer Trump"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10 — "Mit Fäkalsprache gegen Merz"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Palestinian flag incident at the Reichstag

Coverage of this incident comes from a single source. In his column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Dr. Željko Dragić condemns the removal of Germany's unity flag from the Reichstag and its replacement with a Palestinian flag, and asks why no public outcry has come from Muslim politicians and officials. He argues that solidarity with Palestine is legitimate in itself but cannot justify disrespecting German national symbols, framing the episode as a test of respect for the German state and of how Muslim public figures respond to it.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Spain's general strike and riots

This topic is covered by a single source. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung reports factually on a nationwide general strike in Spain that drew millions of participants and was accompanied by violent riots, looting, and more than fifty arrests in Barcelona, amid political disputes over housing decrees. The article focuses on the intensity of the clashes between protesters and police, including the use of pyrotechnics against officers and the burning of barricades, without offering its own interpretive framing of the underlying political dispute.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Israel and international chess boycotts

This topic is covered by a single source. In his piece for Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Stefan Löffler traces how Israeli chess players continue to face visa denials, forfeits and exclusion attempts by opposing federations decades after the 1976 Haifa Chess Olympiad boycott. He frames the issue as part of a long history of politicization of international chess against Israel, noting that only since 2018 has FIDE banned the previously common practice of re-drawing pairings to avoid matches against Israeli players.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

UK government funding for left-leaning media

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column in the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Philip Plickert criticizes the British Labour government for channeling substantial grants from its "Local News Fund" to the Byline Times/Bylines Network, a left-leaning media outlet he accuses of repeated factual errors, conspiracy theories, and biased campaigning. Plickert challenges the government's claim that funding decisions were made on neutral, objective criteria, portraying Byline Times as a tendentious outfit rather than a model of balanced journalism.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

EU court upholds climate policy against Poland

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung reports, in an unsigned piece, that the European Court of Justice dismissed all seven lawsuits Poland had filed against the "Fit for 55" climate package, ruling that unanimous consent among member states is not required and that the EU's climate measures are not disproportionate. The report frames the ruling as an institutional reinforcement of EU climate policy against attempts by individual member states to block it through veto, quoting the characterization of the judgment as "tailwind for European climate protection".

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 18

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

Germany considers coal revival amid gas supply risk

This topic is covered only by Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in a report by Christian Geinitz. The article presents in straightforward factual terms the German Economics Ministry's plan to reactivate coal-fired power plants in order to conserve gas supplies, given the risk that gas could become scarce and expensive due to "geopolitical tensions in the Middle East." It also notes that energy industry representatives welcome the move as a way to lower prices and preserve scarce gas reserves, without offering any critical or opposing perspective.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 19

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Serbian football politics and threats against Vidić

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Michael Martens argues that the political upheaval Serbia has undergone following the weakening of Vučić's grip has not yet reached the world of sport, citing the case of former national team captain Nemanja Vidić, who was threatened with death after supporting the student protests and criticizing corrupt football officials tied to organized crime and to Vučić's inner circle. With no other outlet reporting on this episode, there is no cross-source comparison to draw.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 31

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Saudi LIV Golf and DeChambeau's decline

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. In his column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Thomas Klemm writes with evident irony about the fall of Bryson DeChambeau, once the brash flagbearer of the Saudi-funded LIV Golf series and a figure closely associated with Trump. Klemm relishes describing how the former big talker now has to "bake smaller rolls," framing DeChambeau's retreat as a fitting, almost comic footnote to the broader troubles of the LIV project.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 32

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Malawi, slavery heritage and British Empire legacy

This topic is covered by a single source. In his article in The Daily Telegraph, Craig Simpson reports on the Malawian government's effort to promote a narrative in which the British Empire acted as a "liberator" from Arab slave trading in East Africa rather than as a coloniser. The piece highlights Malawi's push to preserve colonial-era forts and secure UNESCO World Heritage status for slave-heritage sites, alongside its appeal for British financial support, while also noting the government's emphasis on the role African leaders themselves played in the slave trade - encapsulated in the quoted claim that "Britain was not a coloniser; it was a liberator."

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Ebola outbreak and instability in DR Congo

This topic is covered by a single source. In a byline piece for The Globe and Mail, Geoffrey York reports on how rebel attacks on health workers and treatment facilities in Congo's outbreak zone are undermining efforts to contain the fastest-spreading Ebola outbreak in history. The article combines a warning angle - concern that continued violence could reverse six months of progress and put more lives at risk - with a cautiously hopeful note, pointing to early signs that a Canadian-developed vaccine is proving effective. With no other outlet covering the story, there is no cross-source contrast in emphasis or stance to draw out.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Canada-EU ties and auto industry vs China

This topic is covered by a single source. In his article in The Globe and Mail, Steven Chase reports that Prime Minister Carney views deepening Canada-EU ties as likely to spur further partnerships with European automakers, while he remains cautious about Chinese electric-vehicle investment given its potential impact on relations with the United States, reiterating his rejection of assembling vehicles from Chinese-made kits in Canada. With no other outlet addressing this story, there is no competing framing or emphasis to compare it against.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Canada's trade diversification and Port of Prince Rupert

This topic is covered by a single source. In an editorial, The Globe and Mail urges the federal government in Ottawa to formally designate the Port of Prince Rupert as a "project of national interest," on par with the Port of Vancouver, in order to unlock its potential as Canada diversifies trade away from the United States. The newspaper identifies specific structural obstacles - CN Rail's monopoly over the rail line, pipeline bans, and exclusive terminal deals - and argues that allowing competing railroads to use the existing tracks would curb CN's dominance and advance Canada's trade diversification goals. With no other source weighing in on the topic, there is no competing framing or emphasis to compare it against.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Call for US no-confidence vote reform

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column for The Globe and Mail, Andrew Coyne argues that the American presidency has become too powerful and dangerous, and proposes that the United States effectively adopt a mechanism resembling a parliamentary no-confidence vote: normalizing impeachment so it can be used to remove a president who has become odious to the public - in the current context, removing both Trump and Vance. This is Coyne's own personal stance, not an institutional position of the newspaper.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

US-Canada trade war and political fallout

Coverage of this topic comes from a single voice: Tony Keller, writing a column in The Globe and Mail across two linked pieces. Both columns share the same underlying argument - that the recent US midterm election results, driven largely by voter anger over affordability and unpopular tariffs, have opened a political window for ending Trump's trade war with Canada. In the first piece, Keller frames this through a historical analogy to the War of 1812, which ended with a reversion to the pre-war status quo, to suggest that the trade war could similarly resolve itself. In the second, he makes the practical case more explicit, urging Canada to actively lobby the White House, Congress, and the American public for a return to full free trade under the USMCA. Since both pieces come from the same columnist and newspaper, there is no competing framing here, only a two-part elaboration of one optimistic, Canada-centered view on the war's prospects for resolution.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (2)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 21 — "Americans have spoken, and Trump's trade…"

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 24 — "Keller: New U.S. political realities are…"

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Canadian bank oversight and anti-money-laundering reform

This topic is covered by a single source. In her column in The Globe and Mail, Rita Trichur examines Ottawa's plan to shift anti-money-laundering oversight of Canada's big banks to the regulator OSFI. Her stance is cautiously conditional: she argues the plan could work, but only if OSFI is given greater resources, stronger enforcement powers, and more transparency to address long-standing compliance failures at major financial institutions. With no other source addressing this topic, there is no cross-source comparison to draw.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 24

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Middle East conflict impact on CAE's business

This topic is covered by a single source. The Globe and Mail, in an article by Nicolas Van Praet, frames the story narrowly as a corporate business update: Canadian flight-simulation and pilot-training company CAE is raising its earnings forecast despite the Middle East conflict having pressured its operations, crediting cost-cutting and restructuring for the improved outlook. The piece stays focused on CAE's financial performance and management strategy rather than on the geopolitics of the conflict itself, quoting the company's assertion that it does not need a deal with Iran to achieve its results.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 25

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

AI deepfakes in Canada-US trade disinformation

This topic is covered by a single source. The Globe and Mail, in an article by Murad Hemmadi, reports on a McGill University study that uncovered a large network of over 3,000 AI-generated deepfake videos stealing the faces and voices of real influencers to spread content on politically sensitive subjects such as the Canada-US trade dispute and the Alberta referendum. The piece frames the issue primarily around platform accountability and the scale of disinformation, emphasizing the roughly 20 million views the network drew in just three months. With no other outlet covering this story, there is no competing framing to compare it against.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 28

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Putin's rigid demands in Ukraine talks

This topic is covered only by The Guardian, in a report by Pjotr Sauer and Jennifer Rankin, who describe Putin's refusal to soften his demands in the Ukraine talks - rejecting foreign peacekeepers and insisting on full control of the annexed regions. The piece frames this as a straightforward factual account that dampens hopes of an imminent peace deal, set against the backdrop of American envoys shuttling between Moscow and Kyiv in an effort to broker progress. As the only source addressing this specific angle, there is no competing framing to compare it against.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Satire on Nigel Farage and Reform UK

This topic is covered by only one source. In a satirical sketch for The Guardian, John Crace mocks Nigel Farage and Reform UK, portraying Farage as lying low in the wake of his association with convicted rapist Russell Brand and dispatching the party's "B-team" to a rally in Wolverhampton in his place. Crace frames Farage as hypocritical and out of touch, and Reform UK as chaotic and beset by internal disarray, in the sharply ironic register typical of a personal opinion sketch rather than straight news reporting. With no other source addressing this topic, there is no competing angle to compare it against.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Documentary on Israel's killings in Gaza

This topic is covered by a single source. In The Guardian, Philip Oltermann reports on the unprecedented global reach of the documentary NAZA, which documents Israel's mass killing of civilians in Gaza, noting that it has been seen by roughly 1.5 million people since its release. The piece emphasizes the powerful emotional response of audiences and Israeli officials' attempts to punish the filmmakers, framing the film's international success as evidence of the issue's worldwide resonance. With no other outlets covering this story, there is no competing angle or differing emphasis to compare.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 15

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

UK-Argentina Falklands oil dispute

This topic is covered by a single source. The Guardian, in a report by Daniel Boffey, frames the dispute from a British corporate angle, highlighting that Argentina personally threatened the chief executive and chief financial officer of British oil company Rockhopper with criminal prosecution, imprisonment and fines over their involvement in the Sea Lion drilling project, within the wider sovereignty dispute being argued before the international tribunal for the law of the sea. With no other newspaper covering this story, there is no competing framing or differing emphasis to compare.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 21

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

Environmental disaster in the Strait of Hormuz from the war

This topic is covered by a single source, an article by Lorenzo Tondo in The Guardian. His reporting frames the US-Iran conflict not merely as a military and diplomatic clash but as an unfolding environmental catastrophe, arguing that hundreds of attacks on tankers in the strait of Hormuz have caused oil spills devastating marine ecosystems and coastal communities, with damage likely to persist for decades. This distinct angle - foregrounding the long-term ecological cost of the fighting rather than its human toll or strategic consequences - is not echoed elsewhere among the sources surveyed, making this a solitary voice broadening the conversation beyond the usual geopolitical framing of the conflict.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 25

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Future of Trump's foreign policy after midterm defeat

Both pieces on this topic come from the same author, Simon Tisdall, writing in The Guardian, and together form a progression of one argument rather than two competing perspectives. In the first, Tisdall sounds an early warning that an angered Trump, stung by political setbacks, could become more dangerous on the world stage, urging caution toward provoking him. In the second, written after the midterm defeat, he develops the argument further into a more balanced picture: the loss weakens Trump internationally, offering hope to Iranians, Ukrainians, Israelis and Europeans that the tide may be turning against him and other far-right populists, yet he reiterates that a wounded, erratic Trump remains a real risk - potentially pressuring Ukraine into an unfavorable deal or pursuing reckless foreign adventures. Since both pieces share the same authorial voice, the coverage here reflects a single columnist refining and extending his own thesis over time rather than a clash of differing editorial stances.

Sources: The Guardian

Citations (2)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10 — "Beware an angered Trump"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 18 — "Trump trumped: what next for Ukraine,…"

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Global Gen Z protest movements

Coverage of this topic comes exclusively from The Guardian, in two bylined pieces by Ashifa Kassam, one co-written with Lex McMenamin, so this is less a clash of outlets than two complementary angles from the same newspaper. The first article, by Kassam and McMenamin, focuses on documenting the phenomenon itself - a wave of youth-led protests across Bangladesh, Serbia, Brazil, India and beyond - casting gen Z as a rising political force capable of toppling autocratic leaders and pushing back against entrenched authoritarian systems. The second, written by Kassam alone, broadens the analysis by emphasizing what connects these movements - shared social-media infrastructure, economic grievances and disillusionment with broken social contracts - while stressing that because these protests challenge the existing distribution of economic and political power, they have consistently been met with disproportionate state violence. Where the first piece offers a relatively hopeful panorama of an emerging generational force, the second adds a more cautionary layer, highlighting repression and raising the question of whether this represents a lasting generational shift against democratic backsliding.

Sources: The Guardian

Citations (2)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 26 — "Gen Z is rising: youth-led protest…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 27 — "The global rise of Gen Z…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Bolsonaro family's exile and political future

This topic is covered by a single source: The Guardian, in a report by Tom Phillips. The article traces the Bolsonaro family's flight to the United States amid mounting legal troubles in Brazil and examines their efforts to stay politically relevant from exile, citing assessments that the Bolsonarist movement is "mortally wounded" by its own mistakes and crimes. With no other outlet covering this angle, there is no cross-source contrast to draw, though the piece itself combines factual reporting on the family's circumstances with a pointed skepticism about the movement's prospects going forward.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 33

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Sonia Gandhi on Modi and Indian democracy

Coverage of this topic comes exclusively from The Guardian, in two complementary pieces from the same interview series. The first, unsigned article presents Sonia Gandhi's sharp accusations against Narendra Modi and the BJP, whom she calls an "authoritarian force bent upon changing the very nature of our country" that has "systematically dismantled our democratic institutions," pointing to censorship of her memoir and harassment of her family as evidence of a broader crackdown on opposition and free expression. The second piece, a profile by Hannah Ellis-Petersen, widens the lens: it situates Gandhi's remarks within her personal history and the Congress party's decline amid rising Hindu nationalism, while striking a more hopeful note, quoting her cautious optimism that young Indians demonstrating against the government represent "a real shift." Together, the two pieces move from direct political indictment toward a more reflective, generational framing of India's democratic future.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (2)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 42 — "Sonia Gandhi interview: on Modi, democracy,…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 44 — "Sonia Gandhi profile/interview"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Debate over climate 'disinformation' registry in Germany

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column in Die Welt, Axel Bojanowski criticizes a proposal in Baden-Württemberg to create a public registry of climate-related "disinformation." He argues that the line between disinformation and legitimate criticism of Germany's energy transition remains unclear, making such a registry prone to abuse as a public pillory aimed at critics rather than a genuine tool for establishing facts. He contends that relying on name-and-shame lists to win a public debate mainly betrays doubts about the strength of one's own arguments rather than confidence in them.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Kraków mass shooting and far-right ideology

This topic is covered by a single source. The Guardian reports that the gunman behind the mass shooting in a busy market square in Kraków, which killed six people and injured sixteen, has died in hospital. The Guardian notes that officials believe the attack was probably influenced by far-right ideology, and adds the disturbing detail that the gunman's family was found dead at their home. With no other outlets covering the story, there is no competing emphasis or framing to compare.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

France cost-of-living protests and strikes

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. The Guardian reports on nationwide protests and strikes across France over the cost of living and cuts to public services, noting heavy police deployment and clashes in several cities. The article highlights the gap between the government's estimate of roughly 600,000 participants and the CGT trade union's much higher figure of almost 1.6 million - a discrepancy that reflects the contested scale of the mobilization - but since no other outlet covers the event, there is no competing framing to compare it against.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Qatar's nuclear inspection proposal for Iran

This topic is covered by a single source. The Guardian reports on a Qatari mediation proposal under which the United States would lift its blockade of the Strait of Hormuz and release a portion of Iran's frozen assets in exchange for Iran granting IAEA inspectors access to its bombed nuclear sites. The report frames the plan against the backdrop of continuing military escalation, noting Trump's announcement of further US strikes on Iran, presenting Qatar's diplomatic initiative as an attempt to open a possible path to de-escalation even as the military confrontation continues.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Polling accuracy and errors across elections

All five pieces on this topic come from The Economist, so this is less a clash between outlets than a single running argument developed across several angles. One article contends that polling has become statistically more accurate over time even as high-profile misses in the US midterms and Brazil's presidential election expose how changing voter behavior makes the task harder. A second piece warns against drawing hasty lessons from those misses, cautioning French centrists not to assume that because polls underestimated right-wing support in Brazil and the US, Marine Le Pen will similarly underperform her polling in France. A third article, focused specifically on France, goes further, arguing that fears of a repeat polling error favoring Le Pen are overstated, since the historical record of such errors is thin and a runoff against the unpopular Jean-Luc Mélenchon is unlikely to galvanize anti-Le Pen voters. The final two pieces shift to Spain: one notes that Spanish social democrats are hoping Pedro Sánchez can repeat his 2023 feat of outperforming polls that underestimated his party by about three points, while the other broadens the argument theoretically, insisting that despite public skepticism polls remain remarkably accurate compared with alternatives like pundits or prediction markets, even as it flags that Spain's right-wing parties currently appear poised to beat Sánchez's coalition. Taken together, the five pieces build a cumulative Economist argument that balances confidence in polling's overall reliability against repeated warnings not to extrapolate one election's error pattern onto another.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (5)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 214 — "Despite recent misses, political polling is…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 221 — "Why pollsters keep missing the right-wing…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 222 — "French election polling analysis"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 222 — "Spain's Pedro Sánchez and poll-defying politics"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 223 — "Polling accuracy and Spain's political outlook"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Hong Kong pro-democracy activist sentencing

This topic is covered by a single source. The Guardian reports that Joshua Wong, a prominent pro-democracy activist, was sentenced to an additional ten years in prison under Hong Kong's national security law. The article frames the sentencing within a critical perspective, noting that critics describe the law as a tool used to silence political opposition in the city - but since no other outlet covers the story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Litvinenko poisoning memoir and Putin's Russia

Coverage of this topic comes solely from The Guardian, in two parts of what is effectively a single book review by Luke Harding of Marina Litvinenko's memoir. Harding frames the account of her husband's 2006 radioactive poisoning as emblematic of Putin's Russia as a vindictive "mafia state," praising Marina Litvinenko's sustained campaign to expose the Kremlin's responsibility and cover-up. He highlights Alexander Litvinenko's prescient warning that an unchecked Putin would eventually start a war costing millions of lives, tying the personal assassination narrative to Russia's later aggression. Since no other source covers this topic, there is no competing framing to contrast - only Harding's consistently critical portrayal of the Putin regime through the lens of Marina Litvinenko's memoir.

Sources: The Guardian

Citations (2)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 58 — "A Life in Fragments (review of…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 59 — "A Life in Fragments (book review)"

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Rise in online calls for violence in the US

This topic is covered by a single source. In an article for the Los Angeles Times, Nilesh Christopher reports that online calls for violence - largely from right-wing voices targeting Muslims and socialists - have intensified following Democratic victories in the midterm elections, linking the surge partly to platforms like Meta rolling back content moderation and fact-checking. With no other outlet addressing this story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw out.

Sources: Los Angeles Times

Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 1

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

EU sanctions debate over alumina exports to Russia

This topic is covered by a single source. The Los Angeles Times, in an article by Sam McNeil and Jill Lawless, reports on a Russian-owned alumina refinery operating in Ireland that continues to export large volumes of alumina to Russia, a material critics say may feed into weapons production. The piece frames the issue through the tension between official and corporate denials of wrongdoing and the on-the-record accusations of Irish lawmakers and activists, such as Ivana Bacik, who argue the material is clearly reaching military supply chains, lending weight to calls for tighter EU sanctions. With no other outlet covering the story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

US electoral college reform debate

This topic is covered by a single source. In a report for the Los Angeles Times, Nicholas Riccardi and Scott Bauer explain how recent Democratic gains in state legislatures could push the National Popular Vote Interstate Compact closer to the 270-electoral-vote threshold needed to effectively bypass the electoral college. The piece lays out the political logic driving the Democratic push alongside the constitutional and legal challenges the compact is likely to face, quoting the objection that "our Constitution gives states a voice in choosing the president for a reason" to represent the opposing view. With no other outlet covering this story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - the article itself offers a fairly balanced account of a contested structural reform.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

California's smooth ballot counting amid Trump pressure

This topic is covered by a single source. The Los Angeles Times reports that Los Angeles County and California as a whole counted ballots unusually quickly and smoothly despite legal threats and unsubstantiated fraud claims from the Trump administration. The paper frames this as an institutional success story, crediting new funding, upgraded infrastructure, and court rulings that rejected federal demands as having defended the state's election process and averted what it calls an "election disaster." With no other outlet weighing in, there is no competing angle or stance to compare.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

Nigeria's shift to Chinese solar energy

This topic is covered by a single source. In the Los Angeles Times, Yinka Ibukun describes how high fuel prices and a weak electricity grid are pushing Nigerian consumers away from gasoline generators toward cheap Chinese-made solar technology, a shift framed as transforming the market and household energy habits. With no other outlet covering the story, there is no cross-source contrast of emphasis or stance to draw out.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Chuck Schumer's political future in the Democratic Party

This topic is covered by a single source. In his column in the Los Angeles Times, LZ Granderson argues that Chuck Schumer's political era is over: although Schumer spent decades mastering the "inside game" of Washington politics, Granderson contends he is now out of step with a new generation of insurgent Democratic candidates and voters, and that his leadership of the Senate Democrats deserves to be questioned. Granderson emphasizes that the historic victories Democrats are currently enjoying are increasingly being driven by voters themselves, often regardless of or even against Schumer's wishes, rather than because of his leadership.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Black-Muslim-Arab voter coalition in Detroit

This topic is covered only by USA Today, in an opinion column signed by Saafir Rabb II and Rami Nashashibi rather than through straight news reporting. The two authors argue that organizing and solidarity among Black voters in Detroit were essential to electing Abdul El-Sayed as the first Muslim U.S. senator, and warn against celebrating Black Detroit only on election night while neglecting the community afterward. They call for sustained investment and lasting solidarity between Black and Arab/Muslim communities beyond the current election cycle - an explicitly advocacy-driven stance rather than a neutral account of the result.

Sources: USA Today
Citations (1)

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 7

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Trump administration threats against Democratic oversight

This topic is covered by a single source. In USA Today, Joey Garrison reports that the Trump White House warned incoming Democratic House Oversight leaders that aggressive investigations into the president could cross into "blatant criminality," citing an official threat that issuing unlawful subpoenas intended to deprive citizens of their constitutional rights and privileges could warrant further investigation. The article also presents the Democratic counter-position that Congress holds constitutional authority to conduct oversight, and that the administration is accused of weaponizing government to intimidate lawmakers. With only one source reporting, there is no cross-newspaper contrast to draw - the piece itself balances both sides of the confrontation.

Sources: USA Today

Citations (1)

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Trump's media strategy post-midterms

Since only one source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source comparison of competing angles to draw here. In her column in USA Today, Swapna Venugopal Ramaswamy argues that Trump deploys attention-grabbing stunts - such as teasing Dana White as a possible press secretary - to shift public conversation away from disappointing midterm results and persistent complaints about high prices. She frames this as a continuation of his reality-TV approach to governing, writing that "Trump isn't looking for approval. He's looking for audience," presenting the behavior as a deliberate strategy for controlling the narrative rather than an incidental distraction.

Sources: USA Today
Citations (1)

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Deadly DC shooting

This topic is covered by a single source. USA Today, in a report by Leah Douglas and Jana Winter, covers a deadly shooting in Washington, D.C. that stemmed from a dispute among condo residents, framing it as a purely domestic crime story without any international or geopolitical dimension.

Sources: USA Today

Citations (1)

USA Today, Nov 13, 2026, p. 33

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

US management of Venezuelan oil funds

This topic is covered by a single source. In her article for The Washington Post, Samantha Schmidt reports on a State Department disclosure revealing that the U.S. government managed a Treasury account holding more than $12 billion in Venezuelan oil revenue, set up following Maduro's capture. The piece centers on the technical details of how the funds were handled - noting that most were channeled back into Venezuela's economy through foreign exchange interventions and other payments at the request of the country's central bank - while also incorporating criticism from Democratic senators over the lack of transparency surrounding the arrangement. With no other outlets covering this story, there is no competing framing or stance to compare it against.

Sources: The Washington Post

Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

US-Mexico migration policy and migrant caravan

This topic is covered solely by The Washington Post, which reports that Mexican President Claudia Sheinbaum rejected claims that migrant caravans had reached the U.S. border, noting that a caravan of roughly 600 migrants dispersed after being told that reaching the United States would be very difficult. The report frames this within the context of Trump's tariff threats tied to migration, highlighting Sheinbaum's firm pushback against calls for tougher measures and her emphasis on Mexican authorities' "extensive experience" in accompanying migrants. As no other source addresses this topic, there is no cross-outlet comparison to draw.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Russian lawyer sentenced for treason over Ukraine ties

This topic is covered by a single source. The Washington Post reports that a Russian court in Kaliningrad sentenced rights lawyer Maria Bontsler to twelve years in prison on treason charges for allegedly passing information to Ukraine, in a trial held behind closed doors. The article cites a rights group's assessment that none of the information presented by prosecutors was actually secret and that the proceedings denied the defense proper access - framing the verdict as part of a broader pattern of political repression in Russia rather than a straightforward espionage case. With no other source weighing in, there is no basis for comparing differing emphases or stances.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Venezuela under US intervention and power crisis

This topic is covered only by the Washington Post, in a piece bylined by Helena Carpio. Her reporting takes a critical angle on the real-world outcomes of the U.S. military takeover of Venezuela and the oil deals meant to revive its economy: ten months after Maduro's ouster, Venezuelans are protesting at a scale unseen in years, with their chief grievance being the collapsing power grid rather than any economic improvement. The piece frames the promise attached to U.S. intervention as sharply at odds with daily life marked by blackouts, inflation, and deteriorating infrastructure, suggesting that the U.S.-backed interim rule is widely perceived by residents as a failure rather than a success.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

South Korea-US industrial investment alliance

Only one source covers this topic, so no cross-source comparison is possible. The piece is a signed op-ed in The Washington Post by Kang Kyung-wha, South Korea's ambassador to the United States, who frames her country's $350 billion commitment to invest in American energy, shipbuilding, and nuclear projects as a reaffirmation of the decades-long US-Korea alliance rather than a purely commercial arrangement. She presents the investment as mutually beneficial for both nations' economic and security interests, describing the projects as showing "the scale of what our alliance can build together in America." As a diplomatic op-ed by a government representative, it advances an official, persuasive case for the deal without engaging any critical or competing perspective from another source.

Sources: The Washington Post

Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Trotskyist/far-left networks and anti-Israel politics in Germany

This topic is covered by a single source. In an investigative piece for Die Welt, Leander F. Badura argues that the Trotskyist network Marx21 wields far greater influence within Die Linke party and German trade unions, including Ver.di, than has generally been recognized. The article frames the network as an extremist current pushing an explicitly anti-Zionist agenda, quoting its characterization of the "Zionist Israeli state" as needing to be "destroyed in the course of an anti-imperialist, revolutionary uprising across the entire region." With no other outlet addressing this story, there is no comparative framing to draw on - the report stands alone as an exposé of radical ideology embedding itself within mainstream German party and union structures.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

German podcast culture and disinformation

This topic is covered by a single source: Der Spiegel publishes a critical profile of podcaster Ben Berndt, showing how his platform gives guests - including the Russian ambassador and AfD politician Björn Höcke - a venue to spread blatant falsehoods unchallenged, such as denying the Bucha massacre and downplaying the death toll from the WWII bombing of Dresden. The article argues that Berndt prioritizes reach and sensational ratings over factual accuracy, framing his show as emblematic of a broader problem within German podcast culture.

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (1)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 42

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

European and American approaches to right-wing populism

Coverage of this topic consists of a single voice: a reader's letter in Der Spiegel signed by Ulrich Mohr. Rather than institutional reporting, Mohr offers a personal opinion, asking whether Germany still needs to go through a learning process similar to one he believes the United States has undergone in dealing with right-wing populism. He points approvingly to Britain, Hungary, Serbia and Brazil as examples of governments that, in his view, have managed to defuse "right-wing nonsense" through governance that is both clever and close to the people, suggesting Berlin's leaders could learn from them. Since only one source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - just one individual, argumentative stance framed as a provocation for domestic German debate.

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (1)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 110

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Cultural life in Damascus after Assad's fall

This topic is covered by a single source. In a signed piece for Der Spiegel, Dunja Ramadan offers a personal portrait of Bahila Hijazi, a Syrian who returned to Damascus to found a cultural venue aimed at bringing open art, music and film to the city after years of war and the cultural repression of the Assad regime. The framing is intimate and human rather than institutional or political, presenting the initiative as an attempt to revive public and creative life in post-Assad Damascus despite bureaucratic obstacles and lingering social conservatism. Ramadan quotes Hijazi's conviction that "a film can be stronger than ten tanks," underscoring a belief in culture's power to drive change during the transition period. With no other outlet addressing this story, there is no competing or complementary angle to compare it against.

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (1)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 59

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Underground and drone warfare in Donbas

This topic is covered exclusively by Der Spiegel, across three pieces that together function as a single, cumulative voice rather than competing perspectives. All three describe how Russian FPV drone and glide-bomb attacks are rendering Kramatorsk and the rest of Ukrainian-held Donbas increasingly uninhabitable, and all highlight specialized police "drone-hunter" units trying to protect water infrastructure, workers and remaining residents. One piece centers on the police confronting the drone onslaught directly, a second follows a specific fighter named Denys in Kramatorsk and frames Russia's goal explicitly as driving out the entire civilian population, while the third, bylined to Alexander Sarovic, offers the most detailed, reportage-driven account - citing casualty figures, destroyed housing, and a twelvehour delay in firefighters reaching a site because of the FPV threat - alongside residents torn between fleeing and refusing to abandon their homes despite the escalating danger. With no other outlet weighing in, there is no cross-source disagreement here, only a layered, building picture: from the defenders' efforts, to Russia's strategic intent, to a granular human account of life under drone terror.

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (3)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 5 — "Wie Spezialkräfte gegen russische Drohnen kämpfen"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 60 — "Drohnenjäger Denys in Kramatorsk"

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 61 — "In Kramatorsk: Leben und Sterben unter…"

Diplomacy & International Relations

1 source · 1 language

Robert Malley's critique of US Iran policy

This topic is covered by a single source: an interview with Robert Malley published in Der Spiegel. Malley argues that the US-Israeli war against Iran is a disaster, and that Washington and Jerusalem are wrong to assume they alone control how the conflict unfolds. He diagnoses American foreign policy as suffering from a "decades-old chronic illness" - the habit of doubling down on tools, such as sanctions and military strikes, that have already proven ineffective, rather than rethinking the approach. Since no other source engages with this particular framing, there is no competing angle or differing emphasis to compare - Der Spiegel is the sole outlet carrying this critique, and it is presented explicitly as Malley's own view rather than the magazine's institutional position.

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (1)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 63

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Russian recruitment of foreign soldiers from Southeast Asia

This topic is covered only by Neue Zürcher Zeitung. In her article, Nora Züst details how Russia has been expanding its recruitment of foreign fighters for the war in Ukraine beyond its immediate neighborhood, drawing recruits from Indonesia and other countries in Southeast Asia and Africa. The piece frames this as an exploitation of economic hardship - people searching for work across borders - while also highlighting growing pushback against these recruitment networks from Indonesian authorities, civil society groups, and other governments. With no other source addressing the subject, there is no competing angle to contrast, but the article itself balances exposing Russia's exploitative recruitment practices with documenting the resistance now mounting against them.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Zemmour's French presidential candidacy and far-right politics

Coverage of this topic comes solely from Neue Zürcher Zeitung. In a piece bylined by Daniel Steinvorth, the paper profiles Éric Zemmour's renewed presidential bid, focusing on his "remigration" platform and his fixation on the perceived loss of French identity, while also examining internal rivalries within the French far right, particularly friction with Marine Le Pen's camp. With no other source addressing the topic, there is no competing framing to compare.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Yemen's civil war and Houthi advances

This topic is covered only by The Guardian, which reports that Yemen's UN-recognised government has reshuffled its political and military leadership following a failed counteroffensive against the Houthis that left thousands dead. The Guardian frames the story around the gap between Saudi Arabia's air superiority on behalf of the government and its failure to produce gains on the ground, noting that Houthi forces are now nearing Aden despite that Saudi air support. As the only source covering this topic, there is no competing angle to compare it against.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

China's AI surveillance of university students

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column in Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Matthias Kamp describes China's expanding AI-based surveillance of university students - intensified after protests at Nanjing University - as a sign that the government has lost touch with young people's grievances. He argues that rather than tightening controls to forestall unrest, Beijing and local authorities should focus on creating jobs for graduates, framing the underlying problem as economic rather than one that can be solved through tighter monitoring.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung

Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Swiss multilingualism and regional relations

This topic is covered only by Neue Zürcher Zeitung, in a column by Jean-Martin Büttner. He reflects on the relationship between German-speaking and French-speaking Switzerland, arguing that despite a degree of mutual indifference between the two regions, they need and benefit from each other. Büttner welcomes a student exchange program between Zurich and Vaud as a positive step toward bridging the so-called "Röstigraben," the cultural-linguistic divide between the two parts of the country, suggesting that such contact keeps each side from becoming too "typical" or one-dimensional in its own self-image.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 8

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

European Political Community summit in Dublin

This topic is covered by a single source. In Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Antonio Fumagalli offers a factual, institutionally-framed report on the European Political Community summit in Dublin, centering on Swiss President Parmelin's role at the gathering, including his bilateral talks that touched on support for Ukraine. The article notes that Switzerland's Ukraine support was not discussed contentiously, and looks ahead to Switzerland hosting the next summit near Zurich in April - a local, diplomacy-focused angle tied to Switzerland's upcoming role as host.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Kneecap concert controversy in Zurich

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source: an article in Neue Zürcher Zeitung by Nina Belz on the controversy surrounding a planned Zurich concert by the pro-Palestinian Irish band Kneecap. The piece lays out the clash between bourgeois parties - the FDP, the Mitte and the SVP - who are pushing for a review of a possible entry ban given the band's past accusations of supporting terrorism and displaying contentious flags, and left-wing parties along with the venue itself, who defend artistic freedom. Belz does not take a side herself, instead documenting the dispute and noting that city police must be prepared to recognize potentially criminal statements and secure evidence should they occur.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 12

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Global public debt and fiscal policy after crises

All three pieces on this topic come from Neue Zürcher Zeitung, yet they frame rising public debt quite differently. In his column, Thomas Fuster offers the starkest diagnosis, likening industrialized states to addicts suffering "financial long Covid": since the 2008 crisis and the pandemic they have become hooked on debt-financed spending and abandoned fiscal rules, a habit he warns is now colliding with rising interest rates in a way that threatens both state solvency and central bank independence, with painful spending cuts as the only cure. By contrast, in a separate column also in Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Peter Rohner strikes a more balanced, even favorable near-term note, arguing that expansive fiscal policy, together with the AI investment boom, has actually allowed the world economy to absorb shocks from the Iran war and US tariffs - though he cautions that this AI-driven lift is now fading. The third article, an interview also published in Neue Zürcher Zeitung, situates debt within a broader bond-market story: the interviewee contends that soaring government debt in the United States and France, combined with deglobalization, tariffs and geopolitical conflict, has structurally ended the era of ultra-low rates and low inflation, while pointing to real assets as insurance against a possible AI bubble. Where Fuster treats debt as an existential threat demanding austerity, Rohner sees it, at least for now, as a useful growth engine, and the interview frames it instead as a structural force reshaping capital markets.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung

Citations (3)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Die Staaten leiden an finanziellem Long…"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 36 — "Konjunkturausblick: Schub- und Bremsfaktoren heben sich…"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 39 — "Zinsen nun auf einem vernünftigen Niveau…"

Domestic Politics

1 source · 1 language

Assessment of Trump's presidency

This topic is covered by a single source: a letter to the editor in Neue Zürcher Zeitung by Philipp H. Haberbeck, written in direct response to a prior column by Gujer in the same paper that offered a relatively lenient overall assessment of Trump's presidency. Haberbeck pushes back against that framing, arguing that Trump's limited institutional power does not diminish the seriousness of his abuses, pointing to drone-boat killings, deportation policy, the use of legal proceedings against political opponents, and pardons tied to financial interests as evidence that even constrained power can be wielded ruthlessly. Since no other source addresses this topic, there is no broader cross-newspaper contrast to draw - this is a lone, critical voice pushing back against another contributor's view within the same publication.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 18

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Swiss war materiel export law reform and neutrality

All three contributions on this topic appear as reader letters in Neue Zürcher Zeitung, meaning the newspaper itself takes no institutional position but instead hosts a debate among readers who oppose the reform for different reasons. In his letter to Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Heinrich Frei articulates a principled pacifist stance inspired by Bertha von Suttner, arguing that neutral Switzerland must stop exporting weapons entirely and divest from arms-related investments. In a separate letter to the same paper, Thomas Wallimann focuses on legal and institutional concerns, contending that the revised law grants the Federal Council excessive discretion, undermines Switzerland's obligations under the Arms Trade Treaty, and damages its reputation for neutrality - he urges voters to reject it in the referendum. A third, unnamed letter writer takes a more historical and pragmatic angle, reviewing past Swiss export decisions regarding Serbia, Iraq, Yemen and Saudi Arabia to show that practice has long been inconsistent toward countries at war, concluding that the proposed revision will not bring the clarity it promises. While the first two writers object to the reform on ethical and legal grounds, the third questions whether any legal formulation can actually impose consistency on Swiss arms export policy.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung

Citations (3)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 18 — "Leserbrief: Kriegsmaterialgesetz-Revision gefährdet Neutralität"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 18 — "Leserbrief: Revidiertes Kriegsmaterialgesetz widerspricht Völkerrecht"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 18 — "Leserbrief: Kontrollverlust statt Lösung - Schweizer…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Swiss federal budget 2027 dispute

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. In her piece for Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Beatrice Bösiger reports on the surprise rejection of the 2027 federal budget by the National Council's finance committee, caused by an unusual alliance between left-green lawmakers and the right-wing SVP, who oppose the budget for opposite reasons - one camp objecting to cuts in climate spending, the other to disputes over army and agriculture funding. The article frames this as creating real uncertainty over the budget process, underscoring how politically irreconcilable the two camps' demands are, as captured in the quote she cites that the parties' wishes "diverge so much that they can no longer be reconciled."

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung

Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 25

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Swiss corporate taxation and state revenue

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column in Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Matthias Benz draws on an Avenir Suisse study to argue that capital and corporate taxes have become far more important to Swiss state revenue than commonly assumed, leaving Switzerland increasingly dependent on large corporations. From this he concludes that the state should be wary of raising capital taxation, especially given mounting competitive pressures such as the OECD minimum tax, and should instead treat big business and wealthy taxpayers carefully.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 25

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Russian Arctic militarization compared to Ukraine warning signs

This topic is covered by a single source, an interview published in Neue Zürcher Zeitung conducted by Rico Bandle. In it, Robert Habeck argues that Russia's propaganda, militarization and strategic interest in the Arctic mirror the warning signs that preceded the invasion of Ukraine, and he warns that the West must not again underestimate the risk of escalation into a broader conflict. He also criticizes Germany's past energy dependence on Russia and the political failure to heed earlier warnings about it. Since only one outlet addresses this angle, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - only Habeck's own framing as presented in the interview.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 32

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Swiss real estate investment and interest rate shift

As this topic is covered by a single source, there is no cross-source contrast to draw. In a column for Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Zoltan Szelyes argues that Swiss real estate has outperformed foreign markets thanks to the zero and negative interest rate environment of recent years, but cautions that investors now face two distinct risks: a political risk stemming from a possible expansion of the Lex Koller law restricting foreign property investment, and an economic risk tied to an expected return to positive interest rates, which he warns could trigger a further price decline of roughly 10% or more over the next six months.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (1)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 55

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

BSW party's closeness to AfD in Germany

This topic is covered only by Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a piece signed by Tim Frehler and Iris Mayer. The article profiles BSW politician Claudia Wittig in Sachsen-Anhalt and traces how her party is drifting closer to the far-right AfD, both ideologically - sharing anti-sanctions, anti-NATO positions, with Wittig herself calling for NATO's structures to be dissolved "in the long run" - and socially, through controversial fraternizing with AfD figures. The authors frame this as an open question of whether the BSW still functions as an alternative to the far right or is instead becoming its enabler, laying out the evidence without reaching a flat verdict.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 3

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Sexual harassment scandal in the German military

This topic is covered by only one source. In a column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sina-Maria Schweikle addresses the sexual harassment and abuse scandal within the German Bundeswehr, raising questions about personal dignity and institutional culture within the military. Since no other outlet reports on this story, there is no cross-source comparison to draw.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Criticism of Hegseth's culture-war rhetoric at the Pentagon

This topic is covered by only one source. In a column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Jens-Christian Rabe criticizes US Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth for invoking the Frankfurt School and Critical Theory in a speech attacking diversity, equity and inclusion policies, framing them as incompatible with military service and the US Constitution. Rabe argues this amounts to a cynical distortion of serious philosophical ideas in service of a culture war that prizes "victory" over morality, rather than any genuine engagement with thinkers like Adorno. Since no other source addresses this topic, there is no competing angle to compare it against.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 9

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

US export controls on China backfire, strengthen Huawei

Only one source addresses this topic. In a column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Gregor Scheu argues that US export restrictions on Nvidia chips to China have backfired: rather than stopping China's AI development, the curbs have cost Nvidia billions in lost business while accelerating China's push toward technological self-sufficiency, strengthening domestic chipmakers such as Huawei in the process.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

German metal and electrical industry wage dispute

This topic is covered by a single source. Süddeutsche Zeitung reports factually on the escalation of the wage dispute as the IG Metall union calls for an unprecedented round-the-clock strike across metal and electrical industry plants, while also presenting employers' view that the move is an unrealistic escalation given the current economic crisis. The article balances both sides without taking an editorial position of its own.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 13

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

US acquisition of German firm EBM-Papst

This topic is covered by a single source. In her article in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Elisabeth Dostert documents the shock felt by residents and employees in the small town of Mulfingen over the takeover of EBM-Papst, the German world-market-leading ventilator manufacturer, by the American company Madison Industries. The piece blends local voices - such as a local butcher's remark that "globalism is simply coming to us now" - with a broader weighing of the risks of deindustrialization and the loss of German control over a strategic firm, alongside acknowledgment of the growth opportunities the new American ownership might bring. As no other source covers this event, no cross-source framing differences can be identified.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Republicans blame Israel for midterm defeat

All three pieces on this topic come from The Economist, and together they function as a single journalistic voice offering complementary angles on the same development rather than competing perspectives. The coverage traces how Republicans, including Trump and Vance, have begun publicly blaming the relationship with Israel and the war with Iran for their midterm losses, with The Economist noting that even within Republican ranks this is seen as "a bad talking point." The reporting also frames Democrats' midterm victory as accelerating a deeper rift in the US-Israel alliance, arguing that Netanyahu's hardline policies and hard-right coalition have made him "toxic in America," even as structural ties such as intelligence-sharing persist. Rather than presenting conflicting viewpoints across outlets, The Economist's own coverage builds a layered picture - moving from the internal Republican blame game to the broader question of whether the US-Israel relationship itself is becoming more brittle.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (3)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 146 — "Republicans blame Israel for their defeat"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 150 — "Republicans blame Israel for their defeat"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 153 — "Republicans blame Israel for their defeat"

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Siege of al-Obeid in Sudan's civil war

Coverage of the siege of al-Obeid comes from a single source, Neue Zürcher Zeitung, which treats the story in two complementary pieces that together form one voice. In his personal column for Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Samuel Misteli offers an on-the-ground, human account of residents enduring nightly drone attacks, a collapsing health system, and mass suffering, framing Sudan's war as the world's worst hunger and displacement crisis while lamenting its near-total invisibility internationally. The accompanying unsigned report in Neue Zürcher Zeitung provides more structural, data-driven context - detailing the scale of famine across Sudan, the number of people affected, and the breakdown of schools and hospitals around al-Obeid. Where Misteli's column emphasizes individual testimony and implicit criticism of global indifference, the straight news piece grounds the story in statistics and institutional collapse. Since only one newspaper covers this topic, there is no cross-source disagreement, merely two complementary angles - personal and factual - from the same outlet.

Sources: Neue Zürcher Zeitung
Citations (2)

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 4 — "In der Nacht kehrt die Angst…"

Neue Zürcher Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 5 — "Die Stadt al-Obeid wird im Sudan-Krieg…"

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Chagos Islands sovereignty and deportation dispute

This topic is covered here only by The Daily Telegraph, in a report by Amy Gibbons on a court ruling that stripped legal protections from Chagossians who had returned to their homeland in protest at the UK-Mauritius sovereignty handover deal. The piece frames the episode as part of a decades-long injustice, running from the islanders' expulsion more than fifty years ago through to their current legal fight, described as a "David-versus-Goliath" battle, while also noting that the handover deal itself remains in doubt amid pressure from Donald Trump. With no other source addressing the story, there is no competing angle to compare it against.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Iranian reactions to US midterm results

All three pieces on this topic come from The Guardian, so this is less a clash between outlets than a layering of angles within the same newspaper. The unsigned article frames the story in broad geopolitical terms, describing a general sense of uncertainty gripping Iran as a result of shifts in US politics and what this might mean for Iran-West tensions. Deepa Parent's two bylined reports push the focus inward, toward ordinary Iranians' own voices. In the first, she documents mixed reactions to the Republican midterm defeat: some Iranians hope it lowers the risk of war, while others insist that domestic repression and daily executions will continue regardless of what happens in Washington. Her second piece goes further in that direction, centering almost entirely on the IRGC's ongoing crackdown on protesters and civilians, voicing skepticism that world leaders will respond meaningfully, and arguing that the West underestimates the IRGC's loyalty to the regime and its staying power. So while the unsigned piece treats the midterms as an external geopolitical variable affecting Iran, Parent's reporting reframes the story around Iranians' lived reality, in which internal repression feels more pressing and more certain than any shift in American politics.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (3)

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 10 — "Preparing for the worst: Uncertainty grips…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 16 — "State of fear: Uncertainty 'a part…"

The Guardian, Nov 13, 2026, p. 17 — "Iranians describe fear and repression amid…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Decline of South Africa's ANC

All four pieces on this topic come from The Economist, and together they represent essentially one editorial position repeated across several versions and headlines rather than genuinely competing viewpoints. The Economist consistently argues that the ANC's eroding dominance - after decades as South Africa's unchallenged ruling party since the end of apartheid - is a healthy sign of a maturing democracy rather than a crisis, with voters punishing the party for corruption, economic stagnation and failing public services and rewarding better-governing rivals, just as the constitution's architects intended. One version, focused on local elections, adds a more cautious layer to this otherwise celebratory framing: alongside praising the democratic maturity reflected in the rise of the DA and the apparent move away from racial politics, it flags low turnout and rising support for black-nationalist parties as worrying signs for the country's democratic health. Another version goes further in warning specifically against possible coalitions of "black parties" that could act against the constitution and deepen corruption. So while all four share the same underlying optimistic thesis about democracy "working," they differ in emphasis - some stick to an unqualified celebration of the ANC's decline, while others temper it with concrete warnings about the risks of the coalition politics that are replacing one-party dominance.

Sources: The Economist
Citations (4)

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 14 — "South Africans are giving up on…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 20 — "South Africans are giving up on…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 21 — "South Africa's local elections show democracy…"

The Economist, Nov 13, 2026, p. 22 — "South Africans are giving up on…"

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

Austria - politics and climbing culture

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Reports on the court case over activists sawing off climbing bolts on a route associated with FPÖ leader Herbert Kickl in protest, with the judge ruling mountains should stay politically free while debate rages over whether the sentence was too lenient. Key excerpt: "Faschisten aus dem Gebirge jagen"

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 8

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

Russia-Ukraine war

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Broder argues that the memory culture around Nov. 9 must be updated to include Russia's invasion of Ukraine, comparing Putin's genocidal intent to Hitler's and criticizing the West's weak sanctions and unfulfilled weapons promises (e.g. Taurus missiles) that prolong Ukrainian suffering. Key excerpt: "Wie ist es möglich, dass die 21 Sanktionspakete der EU weitgehend wirkungslos geblieben sind? Wo bleiben die Taurus-Raketen, die Friedrich Merz den Ukrainern versprochen hat?"

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

Russia-Ukraine war / Selensky's visit to Denmark

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): The piece argues Selensky was exactly the right leader for Ukraine during this crisis, showing exceptional courage, and that Europe owes Ukraine continued support as Russia tries to break its will through winter infrastructure attacks. Key excerpt: "Seit beginn des Krieges hat er außergewöhnlich beeindruckenden mut und Willen bewiesen, sich der russischen militärmacht nicht zu beugen."

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

Iran-US tensions / alleged Iranian plots against US officials

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): The commentary argues Iran's regime and its Revolutionary Guard Quds Force continue to actively plot attacks against senior US officials, Jews, and Iranian dissidents worldwide, and that no ceasefire deal will end this threat. Key excerpt: "Das iranische regime hat es auf hochrangige US-beamte abgesehen. (...) die revolutionsgarden sind weiter aktiv, und ihre Quds-Truppe arbeitet daran, US-amerikaner, Juden und iranische Dissidenten auf der ganzen Welt anzugreifen."

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nov 13, 2026, p. 2

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

China-Taiwan relations

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Reports on the escalating rhetorical conflict between China and Taiwan over the legacy of Sun Yat-sen, with Xi Jinping using the anniversary to call for reunification and a military show of force, while Taiwan's government accuses China of distorting history to justify annexation. Key excerpt: "Resolving the Taiwan question and realizing the complete reunification of the motherland is an unswerving historical task of the Communist Party of China."

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Nov 13, 2026, p. 6

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

US Republican Party politics after election defeat

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): The piece reports on internal Republican Party struggles to determine the right political course following a recent election defeat in the US. Key excerpt: "Nach der Wahlschlappe ringen die Republikaner um den richtigen Kurs"

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (1)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 4

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

US-Innenpolitik / Republikanische Partei nach Trump

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Nach der Wahlniederlage bricht in der Republikanischen Partei ein offener Machtkampf zwischen MAGA-Hardlinern, Trump-treuen Nachfolgekandidaten und gemäßigten Traditionalisten aus, der auch Trumps Außenpolitik – insbesondere den Irankrieg – als Streitpunkt einschließt. Key excerpt: "Die Zölle, der Irankrieg, das brutale Vorgehen der ICE-Truppen, die Korruption und enorme Haushaltsdefizite: Eine Mi-"

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (1)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 53

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

US-Innenpolitik / Republikanische Partei nach Trump

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Der Artikel analysiert, wie Vizepräsident JD Vance nach dem Wahldesaster der Republikaner bei den Midterms zwischen Loyalität zu Trump und eigener Profilierung gefangen ist, während Rivalen wie Rubio und DeSantis sich positionieren und MAGA-Kritiker eine Parteineugründung erwägen. Key excerpt: "»Das ist der Moment, in dem sich Parteien in anderen politischen Systemen normalerweise aufspalten würden und rechts von den Konservativen eine neue Partei entstehen würde«"

Sources: Der Spiegel
Citations (1)

Der Spiegel, Nov 12, 2026, p. 54