DAILY GEOPOLITICS

Daily Geopolitics Report - Monday, September 21, 2026

Sources covering today:

The Daily Telegraph | Die Welt | The Guardian | Los Angeles Times | Süddeutsche Zeitung | The Wall Street Journal | The Washington Post

Technology & Media 6 sources · 2 languages

AI race, safety debate and financial risk

Coverage of this topic splits into several distinct strands. On the geopolitical-race front, The Daily Telegraph presents Blair urging the West not to slow AI development despite safety worries, framing any pause as a strategic gift to China, while The Wall Street Journal offers an industry-side echo of this through Nvidia's Jensen Huang, who casts AI "doom" concerns as solvable engineering problems - though the article itself flags his obvious financial stake in unrestrained growth. The Guardian instead turns the lens toward Beijing, arguing China views Western slowdown calls, such as Anthropic's Dario Amodei's, as a bid to lock in US advantage, even as more common ground on safety exists than the rhetoric suggests. The Washington Post takes a distinctly domestic-critical angle: one piece ties Trump's resistance to AI regulation to his family's financial stakes in the boom, while two further pieces push back against the safety discourse itself - one attacking effective altruism's "doomsday" framing as distorting real risks, the other urging intellectual humility and warning against letting political tribalism harden premature beliefs. The Daily Telegraph adds a parallel skeptical voice of its own, dismissing "rogue AI" narratives as sensationalized and pointing to a self-interested network of safety institutions. Süddeutsche Zeitung takes a different tack entirely, warning - via Microsoft's Mustafa Suleyman - against anthropomorphizing AI systems like Anthropic's Claude, seeing this as a dangerous, self-fulfilling risk. On the financial front, The Guardian and Die Welt converge from different angles: the former warns of opaque, debt-laden financial structures underpinning the AI boom, while the latter relays Ray Dalio's warning of a valuation bubble decoupled from reality and mounting US government debt risks. Finally, The Wall Street Journal contributes a wholly separate educational angle, calling for universities to teach students to think with, without, and about AI, sidestepping the geopolitical and financial debates altogether.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, The Guardian, Süddeutsche Zeitung, The Wall Street Journal, The Washington Post

Citations (12)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Blair urges West to keep up…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 17 — "Tony Blair urges West not to…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 18 — "There is more to the fairy…"

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 28 — "Why Beijing is pushing back against…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 29 — "Debt underpinning AI boom is threat…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 11

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 17 — "Teach Students to Think With, Without…"

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 22 — "Nvidia CEO Pushes Against Slowing AI"

The Washington Post, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Trump's family investments increasingly tied to…"

The Washington Post, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15 — "This doomsday ideology leads AI politics…"

The Washington Post, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15 — "Politics has poisoned the AI debate.…"

Security & Conflict 5 sources · 2 languages

Trump's threats against Iran and US-Iran tensions

Coverage of this topic splits into three distinct angles. The Daily Telegraph focuses exclusively on Trump's own rhetoric, quoting his threat to "blow up the entire nation" of Iran or "let them rot economically" as an extraordinary, headline-grabbing escalation that reflects an aggressive US posture, with its two pieces essentially representing one voice on the same remark. Die Welt and The Guardian shift the lens from Washington to Tehran, both reporting Iran's military headquarters warning that all US bases and interests in the region would face "continuous, effective and painful" attacks without limitation; Die Welt stays close to the warning itself and its link to Iran's conditions for resuming negotiations, while The Guardian broadens the frame to the whole Middle East, tying in Houthi attacks on Saudi Arabia to depict a region bracing for wider escalation. The Washington Post brings a view from inside the Trump administration, with an ambassador refusing to commit to any timeline for ending the war with Iran and insisting that time and "Operation Economic Fury" favor the US, while acknowledging the economic and political strain from the ongoing conflict and Houthi attacks. The Los Angeles Times, across its two related pieces treated here as a single angle, pivots entirely to global economics, crediting China's vast strategic oil reserves and continued purchases of Iranian crude with averting a much sharper spike in oil prices - sparing Trump greater political fallout - an economic-energy angle absent from the other outlets, which stay focused on rhetoric, military threats, and regional security.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, The Washington Post
Citations (7)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Trump may 'blow up entire nation'…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 13 — "Trump: I might blow up the…"

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 3

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 24

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "If not for China, oil prices…"

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9 — "China's Xi prevents doomsday oil price…"

The Washington Post, Sep 21, 2026, p. 13

Security & Conflict 4 sources · 2 languages

Russia-Ukraine war and NATO threat

The five outlets approach the Russia-West standoff from markedly different angles. The Daily Telegraph stays close to the battlefield, reporting Ukraine's growing long-range strike capability against Moscow amid sham Russian "elections," while giving voice to Zelensky's call for Russia to end the war and choose peace. The Guardian broadens the lens toward direct threats to the West in two distinct pieces: one relays warnings from European intelligence chiefs that Russia may soon "test" Nato's Article 5 through a limited incursion, drone or missile strike, or false-flag provocation; the other argues Moscow has crossed a dangerous new line by allegedly plotting assassinations on US soil, framing this as proof that "nowhere is safe" any longer. Die Welt adds a military-logistical dimension, citing unconfirmed reports that Russia is preparing thousands of extra hospital beds, paired with Nato exercises on Gotland, as evidence of a longer-term military buildup that experts caution should not be read solely through the prism of the Ukraine war. Süddeutsche Zeitung, meanwhile, takes an institutional and personal-profile approach, portraying General Carsten Breuer's rise to chair Nato's military committee as emblematic of Germany's and Europe's need for renewed military readiness in the face of a Russian threat he insists should no longer be doubted. Together, the coverage traces an unsettling arc - from the Ukrainian front, through fears of direct escalation against Nato and terrorism on Western soil, to long-term military and institutional preparation.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, The Guardian, Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (5)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 12

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 5

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "European spy chiefs brace for Russia…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 21 — "'The rules have changed': Has Russia…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 4

Domestic Politics 3 sources · 2 languages

German state elections and rise of the AfD

Coverage of Germany's state elections and the AfD's rise splits along clear national and ideological lines. The Daily Telegraph frames the story through a geopolitical lens: its core reporting centers on Chancellor Merz being weakened by a "humiliating double defeat" to the AfD and Die Linke, repeatedly stressing that the AfD is a Kremlin-friendly party seeking an end to Russia sanctions and Ukraine arms deliveries, so its rise is portrayed as a source of broad European alarm. A companion piece widens the lens further, reporting a formal alliance between Germany's AfD and Italy's Fratelli-aligned Future Nazionale, situating the German result within a rising pan-European nationalist movement. A Telegraph opinion piece goes furthest, diagnosing a historic political fragmentation it blames not on Cold War legacy but on a "fatal abdication of responsibility" by mainstream elites. Die Welt, by contrast, takes a domestic, culture-war angle: one piece bluntly declares that "the bourgeois center is dead," directing blame at a radical, antisemitic-tinged leftist political culture in Berlin and describing Merz's election-night appearance as "ghostly" - locating the crisis on the left as much as the right. A second Die Welt piece instead treats Manuela Schwesig's success in Mecklenburg-Vorpommern as a strategic model, crediting her polarizing "woman versus blue" campaign for neutralizing the AfD's populist momentum and offering it as a template for the SPD's future. Süddeutsche Zeitung concentrates on the CDU's internal collapse, dubbing it the "problem child" that lost governing power in Saxony-Anhalt and Berlin within two weeks and was reduced to a fringe party in Mecklenburg-Vorpommern under Merz's weak leadership, while likewise citing Schwesig as proof that a strong personality can beat back the AfD. A further Süddeutsche Zeitung piece broadens into socioeconomic critique, quoting the Verdi union leader's warning that an AfD government would be a "catastrophe" for democracy and the economy, potentially even triggering a euro and EU exit, while blaming government welfare cuts for fueling the anger the AfD exploits. Overall, the Telegraph situates the story within a Russia-Ukraine geopolitical threat, Die Welt is split between blaming the radical left and offering a social-democratic remedy, and Süddeutsche Zeitung zeroes in on the CDU's internal collapse and its socioeconomic underpinnings.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (8)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Merz clings on to power after…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 11 — "Merz unconvincing as he vows to…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 11 — "German and Italian far-Right parties forge…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 14 — "Germany is as deeply divided as…"

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Die bürgerliche Mitte ist tot"

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Ein Fingerzeig für die SPD"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 4 — "Sorgenkind CDU"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 14 — „Ich hoffe, Herr Merz erkennt: Da…"

Diplomacy & International Relations

3 sources · 2 languages

US-Denmark Greenland agreement

The German outlets, Die Welt and Süddeutsche Zeitung, both focus on the gap between Trump's bombastic rhetoric and the modest substance of the actual deal. Die Welt frames it cynically as a spin exercise: Denmark effectively won diplomatically since the annexation threat was dropped, while Danish officials quietly help Trump "sell" the outcome as a great personal triumph. Süddeutsche Zeitung, across three separate pieces, repeatedly stresses that the agreement largely just formalizes or updates the existing 1951 defense arrangement, dismisses Trump's claim of "permanent control" over Greenland's security as detached from reality, highlights Greenlandic unease about long-term American ambitions to eventually "own" the island, and situates the episode within broader Arctic great-power competition with China and Russia - while warning that Trump's bluster has left lasting damage to trust within NATO. The Wall Street Journal, by contrast, takes a more pragmatic and sympathetic stance: it welcomes the final agreement as a genuine strategic gain for the United States, but criticizes Trump's earlier bullying rhetoric for having damaged NATO unity and weakened Western credibility, even linking the episode to setbacks in the broader push for peace in Ukraine. Where the German papers emphasize the disconnect between rhetoric and reality and European/Greenlandic anxieties, the American source foregrounds strategic benefit while still faulting the reputational cost of the earlier threats.

Sources: Die Welt, Süddeutsche Zeitung, The Wall Street Journal

Citations (5)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 5

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Durchbruch im Grönland-Streit: Dänemark und die…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 4 — "Viel Lärm um Grönland"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 7 — "Neues, altes Abkommen"

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 16

Diplomacy & International Relations

3 sources · 1 language

Trump-Xi summit and US-China relations

Coverage of the Trump-Xi summit diverges sharply in emphasis across the papers. The Daily Telegraph offers the most balanced framing, treating the summit as a welcome, if fragile, de-escalation between two powers whose relationship remains fundamentally driven by competing national interests, and flagging Taiwan and artificial intelligence as the most dangerous future flashpoints. The Washington Post, by contrast, directs its critique less at the substance of US-China relations than at the broader collapse of American alliance strategy: across two pieces functioning as a single voice, it argues that Trump has abandoned coordinated confrontation with allies such as Canada, Europe, and Taiwan in favor of transactional dealmaking with Xi, leaving the US diplomatically isolated and handing Beijing room to expand its influence across Eurasia and the Global South. The Wall Street Journal splits its coverage into two distinct angles: one piece warns that the apparent calm in the Taiwan Strait is illusory, since China continues to erode the status quo through incremental "salami-slicing," and that Trump's conciliatory posture risks legitimizing that erosion; the other shifts to human rights, commending Trump's efforts to free political prisoners while criticizing his failure so far to secure the release of Hong Kong publisher Jimmy Lai, urging him to press Xi further. In sum, the Telegraph favors big-picture geopolitical balance, the Washington Post foregrounds the cost of America's diplomatic isolation, and the Journal divides its concern between a strategic threat to Taiwan and a moral failure on human rights.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Wall Street Journal, The Washington Post
Citations (5)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 16 — "Trump, Xi and Jimmy Lai"

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 17 — "A Quiet Summit Should Alarm Taiwan"

The Washington Post, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Trump is mostly alone on world…"

The Washington Post, Sep 21, 2026, p. 13 — "As Trump prepares to meet Xi…"

Domestic Politics 2 sources · 2 languages

Israeli election campaign

The three articles approach the Israeli election campaign from largely non-overlapping angles. Süddeutsche Zeitung offers two complementary perspectives: one analyzes the tight race itself, arguing that Netanyahu is exploiting controversy over the documentary "Naza" and criticism of the military to boost his re-election chances, noting how sensitive Israeli society is to any accusations against soldiers; the other shifts focus to Israeli youth, portraying peace activist Oren Roll as an exception within a broader rightward shift among the younger generation, thereby providing social and generational context for the political struggle described in the first piece. The Wall Street Journal, by contrast, largely bypasses the ideological content of the race and instead frames the election through a technological lens, warning that AI-generated disinformation is outpacing Israel's outdated election regulations and presenting the vote as a first-of-its-kind global test case for democracy in the age of artificial intelligence. Where the German outlet centers on political dynamics and generational identity within Israeli society, the American outlet positions Israel as a global technological test case.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung, The Wall Street Journal

Citations (3)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 6 — "Israel: Rund fünf Wochen vor der…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 6 — "Jung, jüdisch – und gegen den…"

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9

Migration & Society

2 sources · 1 language

UK migration policy debate

Coverage of the UK migration debate splits between The Daily Telegraph's narrow domestic-political jab and The Guardian's broader, more alarmed treatment of the issue. The Daily Telegraph focuses on mocking the Liberal Democrats, dismissing Sir Ed Davey's proposal to rejoin the EU migration pact as naive or disingenuous, and insisting that the rise in small boat crossings has nothing to do with Brexit but rather stems from the closure of older smuggling routes - framing the crisis as a matter of enforcement rather than a consequence of Brexit itself. The Guardian, by contrast, approaches the topic from two distinct angles. One report exposes Nigel Farage's bid to bring Trump adviser Tom Homan to the UK to impose hardline, American-style border enforcement, spotlighting controversy over ICE's aggressive tactics and Reform UK's growing alignment with Trump-style immigration politics. A separate Guardian piece, by Matthew d'Ancona-style commentator John Harris, takes a wider and more urgent view: despite Reform UK's financial and legal troubles, the party remains a serious contender for power because it exploits deep economic insecurity that Labour under Andy Burnham has failed to address, and the piece warns that Labour must counter fear-driven immigration narratives with honesty and real economic investment or risk the rise of a well-funded far-right politics. Where the Telegraph aims its skepticism at centrist naivety on immigration, The Guardian paints a far more anxious picture of a dangerous hard-right drift demanding urgent political response.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Guardian

Citations (4)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 13 — "Farage says he wants to bring…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 45 — "Democracy can be rescued, but hurry:…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 46 — "Democracy can be rescued, but hurry:…"

Energy & Environment 2 sources · 1 language

German fuel price and energy policy

Coverage of German fuel and energy policy splits sharply between Die Welt's single ideological broadside and three distinct but complementary critiques from Süddeutsche Zeitung. Die Welt frames the public's demand for state relief from fuel prices as a form of "self-infantilization," arguing citizens should accept market consequences rather than expect handouts, and dismisses the government's fuel tax cut as an unfunded giveaway that the middle class will ultimately pay for. Süddeutsche Zeitung, writing from a different political vantage point, offers three angles that are all critical of government policy but for different reasons. One piece attacks the revived fuel rebate as a repeat of a past mistake that chiefly benefits oil companies rather than consumers, insisting better options existed to genuinely ease the burden on citizens. A second piece broadens this into a deeper structural argument: Germany's entire settlement and mobility model rests on the illusion of permanently cheap fossil fuel, and gestures like rebates or price caps are dishonest populist theater, when what's really needed is an honest transition away from car-dependent suburban life. A third piece shifts to an entirely different front, reporting on a clash between major energy companies and the economics minister over grid-connection rules, with industry warning that curbs on renewable feed-in will choke investment, raise costs, and slow the energy transition. Where Die Welt frames the issue as one of civic responsibility and economic morality, Süddeutsche Zeitung consistently locates the problem in the government's own policy failures - both toward consumers and toward the industrial infrastructure of the energy transition.

Sources: Die Welt, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (4)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 2

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 4 — "Hallo, alte Fehler (Tankrabatt)"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9 — "Sagt den Leuten die Wahrheit"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15 — "Netzausbau-Streit: Energiekonzerne gegen Wirtschaftsministerin Reiche"

Domestic Politics

2 sources · 1 language

Antisemitism debate within the Democratic Party

Both papers address the growing rift within the Democratic Party over Israel, but from different angles. The Wall Street Journal focuses on national politics and Andrew Cuomo specifically, directly challenging him to state whether he believes Israel is committing genocide in Gaza and to confront fellow Democrats who make that claim - framing the accusation of Israeli wrongdoing as a real problem within Democratic ranks that party leaders are avoiding confronting. The Daily Telegraph, by contrast, examines the story through the lens of intra-party politics around Senator John Fetterman, whose outspoken, unwavering pro-Israel stance has made him an outcast within his own camp, with fellow Democrats accusing him of backing someone they say is "obviously committing a genocide." So while the Wall Street Journal presses Democratic leadership to reckon with antisemitism and anti-Israel rhetoric in its ranks, the Daily Telegraph frames the story as a damaging internal split that threatens party unity ahead of the midterms.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Wall Street Journal

Citations (2)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 13

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 16

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

UK sanctions on West Bank settlements and Israel trade relations

Both items come from the Daily Telegraph alone, but they approach the issue from markedly different angles. The first, an interview with Margaret Hodge, frames the sanctions politically and morally: she sharply criticises Israeli settlement policy and defends sanctions on settlement goods as a justified response to the "horror" of what is happening in the West Bank, tying the issue to a broader critique of Labour's handling of anti-Semitism and immigration. The second article takes a distinctly economic and business-oriented angle, giving voice to Israeli business groups and UK-Israel trade advocates who warn that the proposed sanctions are creating a "chilling effect" that risks diverting Israeli investment away from Britain toward the United States, presenting the policy chiefly as damaging to trade relations. The paper thus juxtaposes, across two separate pieces, the moral-political case for sanctions and their economic cost, without either article directly engaging the other's argument.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph

Citations (2)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 6 — "'Labour didn't listen to me when…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 17 — "West Bank sanctions 'driving business away'"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

UK domestic fiscal and pension policy

All three pieces come from the Daily Telegraph, so this is not a clash between rival papers but three complementary angles within a single outlet's ongoing coverage of Britain's fiscal and monetary strain. The first article takes a purely domestic view, arguing that scrapping the pension triple lock is not an establishment conspiracy but an economic and moral necessity given the policy's unsustainability. The second broadens the lens by tying the Chancellor's shrinking fiscal headroom to external geopolitical shocks - rising borrowing costs linked to the Iran war and global energy price spikes - leading economists to predict forced tax hikes at the coming Budget. The third, a monetary-policy commentary, warns that the Bank of England, scarred by its delayed response to the 2021-22 inflation surge, now risks overcorrecting by raising rates even though today's inflationary pressure stems mainly from Middle East conflict-driven energy prices rather than excess money supply, in a much weaker economy than before. Together, the three pieces build a consistent Telegraph narrative: a structural UK budget crisis compounded by international shocks, paired with calls for structural reform in both pension policy and monetary strategy.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (3)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15 — "Scrapping triple lock is no establishment…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 17 — "Labour 'will be forced to hike…"

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 18 — "Bank has been burned by past…"

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Slavery reparations and British Empire legacy

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, which takes a clear opinion stance against Britain paying reparations for the historical slave trade. The piece argues that a fair historical assessment must weigh Britain's role in abolishing slavery alongside its involvement in it, and contends that modern-day slavery deserves more attention than demands for compensation over historical wrongs. With no other outlet addressing the subject, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - this is a single, argumentative angle presented exclusively by The Daily Telegraph.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

J.D. Vance's political transformation

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, Die Welt, so there is no cross-source comparison to draw. The piece traces J.D. Vance's remarkable transformation from a stiff, awkward vice president into a confident, media-savvy figure who is being positioned as Trump's potential successor. It emphasizes how Vance is trying to bridge divisions within the MAGA base over the Iran war without directly criticizing Trump - an angle not echoed elsewhere in the reviewed coverage.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 6

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Germany's defense dependence on the US (F-35 deal)

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. Die Welt reports on a lavish ceremony in Texas where German Defense Minister Boris Pistorius received the Bundeswehr's first F-35 fighter jet, framing the acquisition as a paradox: Germany is deepening its military and technological dependence on the United States at precisely the moment when critics are warning about Washington's reliability, especially in the wake of the collapse of the joint European FCAS fighter jet project. The article emphasizes the tension between the pomp of the handover and the strategic risk the decision entails, raising questions about Germany's defense autonomy versus its reliance on an ally whose dependability is increasingly in doubt.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 5

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

German public discourse and 'cancel culture' debate

Only one source addresses this topic: Die Welt, in a critical opinion piece arguing that German public discourse has degenerated into a reflexive practice of branding any dissenting position as "Nazi" or "fascist." The author likens this to hunting monsters in Pokémon Go and calls for a "zero-trust" stance toward such unsubstantiated accusations. Since no other outlet covers this angle, there is no cross-source comparison to draw here.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 7

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

Crisis in German migration policy

This topic is covered only by Die Welt, in a pointed opinion piece framing Germany's migration policy as a systemic failure. The author argues that what began as a humanitarian gesture has turned into serious damage, contending that the state has lost control over asylum enforcement and deportations, with consequences straining housing, schools, public safety and municipal budgets. With no other outlet addressing the topic, there is no comparative angle to draw - but the piece stands out for its sharply critical tone, portraying the crisis as the result of sustained governmental failure.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 7

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

EU nature restoration regulation

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, Die Welt, which takes a sharply critical stance toward the EU's Nature Restoration Regulation. The article portrays the regulation as a "bureaucracy monster" imposing unrealistic green quotas, saddled with uncertain funding and conflicting land-use demands. The author questions the very premise of "restoring" nature in Europe, arguing that the continent's landscape has been largely man-made for centuries, and warns that the heavy-handed rules risk causing more harm than good, potentially undermining public support for conservation efforts. With no other outlets covering this topic, there is no alternative or corroborating perspective to compare against.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 7

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

EU Earth-observation satellite sovereignty

Only Die Welt covers this topic, presenting the EU's new EOGS Earth-observation satellite program, led by Finnish company Iceye, as a strategic step toward European sovereignty and reduced dependence on US-supplied data. The piece frames this within a broader security context, highlighting Ukraine's reliance on such reconnaissance data, and cites the framing that "Europe cannot defend what it cannot see" - positioning independent observation capability as a prerequisite for autonomous defense capacity. With no other outlets addressing this topic, there is no competing angle or differing emphasis to compare.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Trump's negotiation style toward Putin and Europe

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, Die Welt, which presents an analytical piece by negotiation expert Matthias Schranner on Trump's bargaining style. Rather than straight news reporting, the article offers an expert framing of how Trump "masterfully plays the king," staging dominance and power - as illustrated by his reception of the EU Commission chief at his Scottish golf course - while wielding threats he does not always carry out. The piece also criticizes Europe's moralizing stance toward Trump and Foreign Minister Baerbock's confrontational approach, and warns that Putin is becoming increasingly isolated and dangerous. Since no other outlet covers this angle, there is no cross-source contrast to draw; the topic stands as a single, expert-driven perspective on the psychology and strategy behind the negotiations.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Sep 21, 2026, p. 10

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

EU dependence on Chinese rare earths

This topic is covered only by The Guardian, which presents the view of industry figures and EU officials that China's dominance over rare earth exports poses a dangerous chokehold on global manufacturing. The article stresses the urgency for Europe to diversify its supply chains away from China and cites calls for Trump and Xi to reach a deal easing Chinese export restrictions, framing the current dependence as an untenable stranglehold. With no other source reporting on this issue, no contrasting emphasis or framing can be identified across outlets.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 28

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Russia's assassination and sabotage campaign against the West

Only one source, The Guardian, covers this topic, so there is a single framing rather than a cross-source comparison. The article argues that Russia has escalated its campaign of sabotage, assassination and intimidation against dissidents and states supporting Ukraine, presenting an alleged plot to kill a dissident on US soil as a dangerous crossing of a previously respected red line - one that suggests the rules of engagement may be changing even on American territory itself.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 21

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

UK-US relations under Trump

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, The Guardian, which frames UK-US relations under Trump as a precarious balancing act for British leadership. The piece stresses that although Trump is an unpopular president, he still holds the upper hand in the relationship, and is currently angered by the UK's refusal to join strikes on Iran and by its ban on trade with West Bank settlements. The analysis argues that Burnham, like Starmer before him, will have to tread a perilous path in managing this capricious and demanding ally. With no other outlet addressing the subject, there is no cross-source contrast to draw, but the notable emphasis here is on the domestic political risk and fragility inherent in Britain's dependence on an unpredictable White House.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 4

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Celebrity activism and Israel-Palestine

Only one outlet, The Guardian, covers this topic, so there is no cross-source comparison to draw. The piece, an opinion essay, defends celebrity and artist activism on Israel-Palestine, arguing that calls for entertainers to "stay out of politics" are unrealistic and disingenuous. The author frames the current wave of cultural outrage over Gaza not as an aberration but as a predictable consequence of failing political institutions and electoral democracy, with artists stepping in to fill the resulting vacuum. The article takes a clear, avowedly sympathetic stance toward artists' engagement rather than offering a balanced or opposing viewpoint.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 47

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

UK's Eurovision failure

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, The Guardian, in an opinion piece responding to British MPs launching a parliamentary inquiry into why the UK keeps performing so poorly at Eurovision. The author dismisses the premise that there is any real "mystery" to solve, arguing that the country's failures stem not from weak songs but from Britain's damaged international standing in the Brexit era and lingering ill will from other countries, rather than from any fixable flaw in song selection. Rather than treating this as a policy problem, the piece adopts a wry, resigned tone, suggesting that being bad at Eurovision has simply become part of British national identity, something to be embraced with self-deprecating humor rather than investigated by Parliament.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 48

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

US third-country deportation program

All six pieces on this topic come from The Guardian alone, so this is not a clash of perspectives between different newspapers but a set of complementary investigative reports building one sustained critical narrative. Four of the articles cover essentially the same investigation into secret deals struck by the Trump administration with third countries - including the Central African Republic and Sierra Leone - to accept deportees with no ties to those nations; these should be read as a single voice emphasizing Stephen Miller's role in driving the policy, US payments to receiving governments, the compromised part played by the IOM, and the severe harm done to asylum seekers, including an attempted suicide and the deportation of a gay man to Sierra Leone. A further Guardian piece deepens the human angle through the account of an Iranian asylum seeker shackled and flown to an unknown destination, framing the program as a deliberate effort to undermine the very concept of asylum. A sixth, distinct article extends the critique beyond deportation itself to press freedom, arguing that immigrant journalists have themselves become ICE targets for reporting on these practices. Taken together, The Guardian presents a consistent editorial line sharply condemning the program as cruel, arbitrary and unaccountable, foregrounding victims' testimony and human rights advocates without offering a comparable government counter-narrative.

Sources: The Guardian

Citations (6)

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Banished to alien lands: Secret US…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 6 — "Revealed: Trump's secret deals to deport…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 7 — "US 'third-country' deportation deals investigation"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 8 — "US deportations to Central African Republic…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9 — "Deportation crackdown: migrants sent to third…"

The Guardian, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9 — "Press crackdown: journalists targeted by ICE"

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Women's health care in California prisons

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, Los Angeles Times, which frames the issue as an advocacy piece arguing that incarcerated women are systematically excluded from the growing movement to address menopause care. The piece holds up California's pilot program as a model worth expanding nationwide to ensure equitable healthcare access for this overlooked population. With no other outlets covering the story, there is no cross-source contrast in emphasis or stance to draw.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 11

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Labor's declining share of the US economy

Only the Los Angeles Times covers this topic. Columnist Michael Hiltzik frames the record drop in labor's share of national income as evidence of eroding worker power, arguing it reflects both rising corporate profits and government policy choices - such as Trump's tax cuts and the weakening of worker-protection agencies like the Department of Labor and the National Labor Relations Board - that favor capital and the wealthy at workers' expense. With no other outlet addressing the story, there is no competing angle to compare, though the piece's framing is notably critical of the administration's economic policy.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 9

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Iran war, gas prices and US inflation

Both articles come from Los Angeles Times alone, and together they build a two-sided account of how the war with Iran is feeding into gas prices and inflation in the US, each emphasizing a different dimension. One piece takes a human and political angle, capturing the frustration of working- and middle-class Americans at the pump and sharply contrasting Trump's characterization of the price increase as "inexpensive" with the lived financial hardship of consumers, linking this discontent to brewing anger ahead of the midterm elections. The other piece adopts a more economic, analytical framing, citing economists' warnings that the disruption to energy markets could be prolonged and could spread through the broader economy, focusing less on public sentiment and more on systemic risk. Rather than reflecting competing perspectives from different outlets, these are complementary angles from the same newspaper on a single underlying story.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (2)

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 3 — "An overwhelming sense of frustration at…"

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 8 — "Middle East fighting fuels U.S. gas…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

California-federal election administration disputes

This topic is covered solely by the Los Angeles Times, in two articles that together function as a single, consistent editorial voice rather than competing perspectives. The paper frames the Trump administration's actions - issuing subpoenas to California and Los Angeles County election officials and repeatedly alleging noncitizen voting - as a politically motivated campaign lacking evidentiary support, aimed at undermining public confidence in the election and laying groundwork to contest November's results. Both pieces center the perspective of state election officials and outside experts, who describe the federal moves as destabilizing and intimidating at a particularly sensitive moment, just as ballots are about to be mailed. Since no other outlet covers this dispute, there is no cross-source contrast to draw; the story is presented exclusively through California's state-level vantage point.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (2)

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "California still battling Trump over elections"

Los Angeles Times, Sep 21, 2026, p. 4 — "L.A. County subpoenaed as Trump stokes…"

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

German/EU aid to Lebanon and corruption

This topic is covered solely by Süddeutsche Zeitung, which takes a critical view of German and EU development aid policy toward Lebanon. The article argues that despite more than a billion euros channeled into Lebanese development, the funds are squandered through corruption, mismanagement, and a lack of accountability, citing examples such as renovated parks falling into disrepair within months. Its conclusion goes beyond factual reporting to make a normative claim: that pouring in more foreign aid will not fix the problem and may even entrench bad governance, and that genuine change must come from structural reforms within Lebanon itself. With no other source covering this story, there is no contrasting angle or dispute to compare it against.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 3

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Epstein scandal and US justice system accountability

This topic is covered only by Süddeutsche Zeitung, which reports on how victims and activists have organized a traveling exhibition of Epstein files to protest the lack of accountability and transparency surrounding the case. The article adopts a critical stance toward the Trump administration and the Justice Department, quoting victims who lament that the whole world is watching while nothing happens, and raising pointed questions about the credibility of the US justice system. Since no other source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source comparison to draw.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 7

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Press freedom under the Trump administration

All four articles on this topic come from Süddeutsche Zeitung alone, so there is no cross-newspaper contrast here but rather four complementary angles from the same outlet on the same event: the barring of CNN, MSNBC and Politico from the White House. Two of the pieces focus mainly on the act itself, framing it as an intimidation tactic and an attack on press freedom, citing critics who see it as a threat to First Amendment norms. A third piece broadens the context, likening Trump's behavior to authoritarian regimes such as Russia and China and linking the media ban to the closure of the Kennedy Center and attacks on the courts as part of a wider pattern of eroding American democracy. The fourth article takes a distinctly different, more personal angle, focusing on the humiliation of Axel Springer CEO Mathias Döpfner, who after years of courting and deference toward Trump now sees his own outlet, Politico, shut out of the White House - presenting this as an ironic and demeaning comeuppance for someone who cast himself as the president's close ally.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (4)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 1 — "Weißes Haus sperrt drei Medienhäuser aus"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 4 — "Draußen bleiben! (Trump and the media)"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 7 — "Trumps neueste Attacke auf die Pressefreiheit"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 19 — "War doch nur Spaß, oder? Und…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Critique of Trump-era oligarchy and kleptocracy

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source: a Süddeutsche Zeitung book review of Bernie Sanders' "Fight Oligarchy." The review portrays the book as a passionate and well-argued indictment of what it calls Trump's kleptocratic system and American oligarchy, expressing admiration for Sanders' tireless and consistent criticism. At the same time, the piece is not uncritical - it notes that Sanders offers no clear plan for financing his proposals and that some of his arguments feel dated. Since no other outlet addresses this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw; instead, the piece itself balances sympathy for Sanders' political message with a more skeptical, practical assessment of its feasibility.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 18

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

German chancellors' relationship with intellectuals

This topic is covered solely by Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a book review of Peter-André Alt's study of the shifting relationship between German chancellors and intellectuals from Adenauer to Merkel and Scholz. The review praises Alt's balanced, well-researched account, emphasizing how foreign-policy issues - such as arms sales to Israel, Ostpolitik, and German reunification - shaped a relationship that oscillated between ignorance, distance, respect, rapprochement, and contempt. Since only one source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw; the coverage reflects an internal German cultural-historical perspective rather than an issue of immediate international interest.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 18

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

German auto industry crisis amid China/US trade competition

Both pieces come from Süddeutsche Zeitung alone, but they approach the German-European industrial crisis from complementary angles. The first article focuses on the auto industry, arguing that job cuts and internal cost-cutting will not fix the real problem - management failure and complacency - and calls on Europe to respond firmly to unfair Chinese competition and US tariff pressure rather than letting carmakers push for an appeasing stance toward Beijing and Washington. The second article turns to a related sector, electrical steel, and takes a more approving tone toward a concrete EU response: new tariffs against cheap Chinese imports, while acknowledging that this measure also raises the cost of the energy transition. Together, the two pieces present a consistent editorial line: support for a tough European stance against Chinese competition and American pressure, combined with internal criticism of German industry itself for not doing enough to meet the challenge.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (2)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 13 — "Sparen allein rettet niemanden"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15 — "EU schützt sich vor chinesischem Billig-Blech"

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

US Treasury currency and trade tariff policy

This topic is covered only by The Wall Street Journal, in an opinion piece examining what it calls "The Bessent Predicament" - the challenge facing the U.S. Treasury Secretary as demand for U.S. Treasurys weakens. The article criticizes Bessent's short-term fixes, such as intervening in the yen market and promoting stablecoins, characterizing them as mere Band-Aids that fail to address the underlying problem. Instead, the author argues for abandoning tariffs, encouraging free trade, and letting markets - both in the U.S. and Japan - set interest rates, as the genuine path to restoring confidence and demand for American debt. Since no other source addresses this topic, there is no cross-outlet comparison to draw; instead, this stands as a distinct, market-liberal viewpoint explicitly opposed to the administration's tariff policy.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Venezuela's political crisis

This topic is covered by a single source. The Wall Street Journal frames Venezuela's crisis through the lens of opposition leadership, stressing that despite Maduro's capture the country remains a repressive police state. It portrays opposition leader María Corina Machado's planned return as courageous but fraught with grave danger, warning of the risks she faces from a regime still bent on repression. With no other outlets covering this specific angle, there is no cross-source contrast to draw regarding emphasis or stance.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

US-Australia cattle trade

This topic is covered by a single source, The Wall Street Journal, which frames it not as a straightforward news report but as an economic opinion piece. The author argues that President Trump is addressing the wrong problem in tackling high U.S. beef prices, and instead proposes a joint US-Australia program to rebuild the American cattle herd using Australian breeding cattle and genetics as a practical, longer-term solution to the domestic cattle shortage. With no other outlets covering this story, there is no basis for comparing differing emphases or stances across sources.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

FDA approval of cancer screening test

Only The Wall Street Journal addresses this topic, in an opinion piece advocating swift FDA approval of Grail's multi-cancer blood test, Galleri. The piece takes a clear ideological stance in favor of medical innovation and against cautious regulation, criticizing what it calls "paternalistic" critics who want to delay approval or ration access to the test. With no other outlets covering the story, there is no basis for comparing differing emphases or angles - this stands as a single, unchallenged viewpoint within the sampled coverage.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal

Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 16

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Cold War espionage history

This topic is covered by a single source: The Wall Street Journal runs a book review of Richard Kerbaj's account of KGB defector Oleg Lyalin, praising it as a vivid, engaging portrait of Cold War espionage among the Soviet Union, Britain, and the United States, likening its cast of characters to figures from a John le Carré novel. The review is not without reservations, however, noting that the book's subtitle oversells its claims somewhat. As no other outlet addresses this story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - only The Wall Street Journal's own appreciative but measured take.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Saudi Arabia's strategy against the Houthis

Only The Wall Street Journal covers this topic, in an opinion piece arguing that Saudi Arabia must clarify its strategic objective toward the Houthis in Yemen before launching any coalition military operation. The piece frames the kingdom's dilemma as a choice between seeking de-escalation to secure quiet on its southern border or treating recent provocations as a crossing of red lines that demands a forceful military response, stressing that any major action would require prior buy-in from Washington. With no other outlet covering this specific angle, there is no cross-source contrast to draw.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 16

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

US domestic battery production to reduce China dependence

This topic is covered only by The Wall Street Journal, in an opinion piece arguing that Washington must actively build domestic sodium-ion battery production capacity to genuinely reduce reliance on Chinese battery technology. The article frames the issue as a matter of industrial policy: rhetoric or trade restrictions alone will not wean the U.S. off Chinese supply chains unless the government helps create the manufacturing capacity that makes an American alternative economically viable. With no other source addressing this topic, there is no competing framing to contrast, but the piece stakes out a clear strategic-economic stance favoring proactive state support for domestic battery industry development.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 16

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Government efficiency reform (DOGE)

This topic is covered by a single source, The Wall Street Journal, so there is no cross-source contrast to draw. The piece offers an internal critique of the DOGE initiative, arguing that it failed because it was never a serious reform effort but largely a publicity stunt centered on the president and Elon Musk, faulting it in particular for sidelining actual government workers who could have driven genuine change from within.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 16

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

California homelessness spending and fraud

Only The Wall Street Journal covers this topic, in an opinion piece that squarely blames California's progressive spending model for enabling widespread fraud in homelessness funding. The article specifically targets liberal billionaire donors who champion tax increases and permissive drug policies, arguing they are complicit in worsening the crisis because higher taxes create "pots of money" that criminals exploit while subsidizing dependency rather than solving homelessness. With no other outlet addressing this story, there is no alternative framing or competing perspective to compare it against.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 17

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

US bond market signals and geopolitical risk

Only one source, The Wall Street Journal, addresses this topic, so no cross-source comparison is possible. Its coverage takes a cautious, analytical stance, emphasizing how difficult it is to interpret the sharp rise in Treasury yields: the move could reflect a strong economy, or it could signal eroding confidence in U.S. credibility. The piece highlights that competing bond-market models (ACM versus KW) produce contradictory signals on whether investors are demanding a risk premium tied to volatile inflation, erratic policymaking, trade wars, and geopolitical shocks that have deterred foreign buyers of Treasurys. Rather than offering a firm conclusion, the article underscores methodological uncertainty in reading these market signals.

Sources: The Wall Street Journal
Citations (1)

The Wall Street Journal, Sep 21, 2026, p. 26

Diplomacy & International Relations

1 source · 1 language

Political repression in Hong Kong

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, The Washington Post, so there is no cross-source contrast to draw. The piece is framed as an opinion-driven condemnation rather than a neutral report: it argues that Hong Kong's courts, acting in concert with the Chinese Communist Party, have transformed the peaceful slogan "end one-party dictatorship" into a criminal offense, effectively equating calls for reform with subversion. The Washington Post takes a clear advocacy stance in favor of the convicted democracy activists - Jimmy Lai, Lee Cheuk-yan, Albert Ho, Chow Hang-tung and Joshua Wong - predicting that history will ultimately vindicate them. With no other outlets covering the story, there is no basis for comparing differing emphases or angles.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Sep 21, 2026, p. 15

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Global health funding fight against AIDS, TB and malaria

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, Süddeutsche Zeitung, in an interview with Peter Sands, head of the Global Fund to fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria. The piece takes a measured, mixed-outcome angle: it acknowledges clear progress against HIV and Tuberculosis, but frames the fight against Malaria as still "undecided," citing a combination of armed conflict, climate change and growing insecticide resistance. Its central emphasis, however, is a warning about funding cuts - particularly from the United States and other donor countries - which Sands argues threaten to unravel hard-won gains, even as operational efficiency has improved. Since no other outlet covers this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw; the coverage stands as a single expert voice combining cautious optimism with genuine concern about the road ahead.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Sep 21, 2026, p. 12