DAILY GEOPOLITICS

Daily Geopolitics Report - Wednesday, October 28, 2026

Sources covering today:

The Daily Telegraph | Die Welt | Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung | The Globe and Mail | The Guardian | Los Angeles Times | Süddeutsche Zeitung | USA Today | The Washington Post

Domestic Politics 8 sources · 2 languages

Bolsonaro family flees Brazil after election loss

All the outlets agree on the core facts - that Flávio Bolsonaro allegedly left Brazil for the United States after his father's defeat to Lula, defying a Supreme Court order to surrender his passport - but they diverge in emphasis. The Daily Telegraph, The Globe and Mail and Los Angeles Times foreground the diplomatic dimension, reporting that the Trump administration will grant the family entry visas, a move deepening the rift between Washington and Brasília, and quote Trump's own claim that the election looked "rigged." The Washington Post, in an article bylined by Marina Dias, Terrence McCoy and John Hudson, adds a more human angle, stressing fears of imminent arrest, while a companion piece frames the episode as an echo of Jair Bolsonaro's own earlier flight to Florida. The Guardian, in a piece bylined by Tiago Rogero, highlights Brazilian lawmakers' calls for his arrest and an Interpol Red Notice, while a separate Guardian piece analyzes how the defeat may be loosening the Bolsonaro family's grip on the far right and stoking a succession struggle involving the sons and Michelle Bolsonaro. Among the German-language papers, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung focuses chiefly on the reported flight itself, quoting Jair Bolsonaro's defiant claim that "I didn't lose, the system won," while Die Welt emphasizes the legal angle - the passport seizure tied to a money-laundering probe - alongside Trump's seeding of doubt about the result. Süddeutsche Zeitung offers the most layered picture: one report notes that Bolsonaro's own party has in fact recognized Lula's victory even as he pursues legal challenges to the campaign, while a piece bylined by Jan Heidtmann details the corruption investigations against him and frames the disputing of the election's legitimacy as a deliberate strategy to mobilize his base.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, Süddeutsche Zeitung, The Washington Post

Citations (12)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 11

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Flávio Bolsonaro soll aus Brasilien geflüchtet…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Bolsonaro soll geflüchtet sein"

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Bolsonaro said to have fled Brazil…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 26 — "Flávio Bolsonaro said to have fled…"

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Bolsonaros Partei erkennt Niederlage an"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 7 — "Dem Wahlverlierer droht ein Korruptionsverfahren"

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Bolsonaro flees to U.S. after loss…"

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 12 — "Flávio Bolsonaro, defeated in Brazil, follows…"

Domestic Politics 7 sources · 2 languages

Israeli election deadlock

All the outlets report exit polls pointing to deadlock, but they frame it very differently. The Daily Telegraph, in its news report and in Henry Bodkin's follow-up, stresses that Netanyahu will remain caretaker prime minister with power to restart the war with Iran, casting the result mainly as prolonged uncertainty and the likely prospect of another election. The Globe and Mail takes a sharper anti-Netanyahu tone, with one article quoting a claim that "the Israeli public has voted against Netanyahu's service," while its companion piece on record turnout speaks of a "crushing defeat" and "total collapse" for his bloc and highlights Gadi Eisenkot's emergence as chief rival. The Guardian offers the widest range of coverage: Peter Beaumont's report describes a knife-edge result with the opposition bloc under Eisenkot narrowly ahead, a separate news piece frames the vote as a referendum on nearly 17 years of Netanyahu rule and raises his fear-mongering against Arab voters and his corruption trial, and Emma Graham-Harrison and Julian Borger focus on voters' personal anxieties and the deep social divisions the election has exposed. The Los Angeles Times, in both its initial report and the fuller account by Tia

Goldenberg and Cara Anna, repeatedly uses the phrase "sharp rebuke" to Netanyahu and emphasizes that his opponents appear to have captured a solid majority, while still noting the risk of political limbo. The Washington Post, across its two pieces, centers on record turnout since the October 7 attacks and what it describes as deep public distrust of Netanyahu and his government, while flagging the pivotal role Arab parties, settlement policy and ultra-Orthodox conscription could play in coalition talks. By contrast, Süddeutsche Zeitung and Die Welt take a purely explanatory, non-partisan approach: the former runs an encyclopedia-style entry on the Knesset's structure and rules, and the latter traces the history of Israel's distinctive paper-ballot voting system back to Mandate-era Jewish community elections, without engaging with the political outcome itself.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, The Globe and Mail, The Guardian, Los Angeles Times, Süddeutsche Zeitung, The Washington Post

Citations (13)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Israeli election in deadlock, says exit…"

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 11 — "Netanyahu fails to win majority, polls…"

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Israeli election sets stage for weeks…"

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9 — "Voter turnout was 77.7 per cent,…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Israel poll on knife-edge amid historic…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4 — "Netanyahu's fate in balance as Israelis…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 5 — "'I want to hope, but I…"

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "No clear winner emerges in Israel"

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Exit polls show rebuke of Netanyahu"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "No clear winner in Israel election"

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 12 — "Exit polls show a tightening in…"

Domestic Politics 6 sources · 2 languages

France's political and economic crisis amid riots

Coverage of France's crisis splits along several distinct angles. The Daily Telegraph, in Chris Price's report, zeroes in on the financial fallout: consumer confidence at a 13-year low and borrowing costs at a 24-year high, framing the unrest as a direct threat to financial stability ahead of elections. The Los Angeles Times, in Michael Finnegan's piece, offers a broader factual narrative of the protests' scale - hundreds of thousands of demonstrators, thousands of arrests, attacked businesses - and the government's response, without pushing a strong interpretive line. In the Washington Post, Jim Geraghty uses a satirical conceit about future NFL games in Paris to deliver a sharply political warning that France ignored its social fractures for a generation and now faces a destructive force fusing leftist economics and Islamism, a far more editorializing frame than the straight news reports. Die Welt provides the most multifaceted coverage: Martina Zippert, in a column for Die Welt, argues Macron's concessions to student protesters are an "uncovered check" exposing the deeper failure of his education reforms; a separate unsigned report in Die Welt covers the government's factual announcement of more funding and teaching posts in response to the protests; and Stefan Beutelsbacher, in another column for Die Welt, warns that Marine Le Pen's budget plans - including unilaterally slashing France's EU contributions - are economically unworkable and could deepen the crisis with serious consequences for the EU as a whole. The Globe and Mail's Eric Reguly widens the lens beyond France entirely, situating the unrest within a broader European pattern of shrinking welfare budgets colliding with rising defense spending, arguing the current lull is only temporary. Finally, the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in Michaela Wiegel's report, introduces a wholly different angle - the Senate's rejection of constitutional autonomy for Corsica - framing it as part of a wider structural tension between French centralism and separatist demands, citing warnings from both sides about renewed violence.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail, Los Angeles Times, The Washington Post

Citations (8)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 19

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Macrons ungedeckter Scheck"

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3 — "Nach Schülerdemonstrationen: Paris geht auf Forderungen…"

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9 — "Die teuren Versprechen der Marine Le…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 8

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 17

Diplomacy & International Relations

5 sources · 2 languages

Nordic leaders' talks with Putin expose European divisions

All the sources cover the same event - phone calls between Finland's President Stubb and Norway's Prime Minister Støre with Putin - but diverge sharply on whether this was a constructive diplomatic opening or a damaging strategic misstep. The Daily Telegraph, in Joe Barnes's report, argues bluntly that the outreach "fell flat" and exposed a wedge between Ukraine's European supporters that amused Putin, while in a separate column in the same paper Garry Kasparov broadens the point into a warning that Europe must urgently unfreeze Russian sovereign assets and arm Ukraine decisively or risk defeat and irrelevance. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung centers its coverage on Danish Prime Minister Frederiksen's sharp criticism of the Norwegian-Finnish move as a risky "go-it-alone" initiative given the absence of any genuine signs of peace, with Frederiksen insisting Europe should stay united rather than act unilaterally. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in Hubert Wetzel's piece, frames the Finnish-Norwegian move more sympathetically, as neighboring states seeking to de-escalate strikes on Ukrainian energy infrastructure and preserve long-term support for Ukraine, while still noting Danish skepticism; a separate, shorter report in the same paper treats the call more neutrally as an attempt to convey messages ahead of future negotiations. USA

Today, in Essi Lehto's account, frames the calls as a notable break from the European practice of shunning Putin, set against fraying Western unity and shifting US policy, while also airing other European leaders' doubts that Russia genuinely wants peace. The Guardian, reported by Luke Harding and Pjotr Sauer, pairs the Putin call with news of a local ceasefire in Ukraine and directly quotes Frederiksen's skepticism toward the "independent initiative" and her view that Russia shows no sign of wanting peace with Europe.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Guardian, Süddeutsche Zeitung, USA Today

Citations (8)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13 — "Putin's talks with Nordic leaders fall…"

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 14 — "Putin will win unless Europe seizes…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Frederiksen kritisiert Telefonat mit Putin"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6 — "Stubb und Støre sprechen mit Putin"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 31

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Gespräche über Ukraine"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6 — "Finnland und Norwegen suchen das Gespräch…"

USA Today, Oct 28, 2026, p. 27

Security & Conflict

4 sources · 2 languages

Alleged Iran-linked plot against RAF Fairford

All four sources report the same underlying event - charges brought against two British men accused of assisting an Iranian operative in a plot targeting RAF Fairford - but each frames it with a different emphasis. The Daily Telegraph zeroes in on dramatic operational detail, notably the roughly £65,000 allegedly sent to buy equipment for the plot, presenting the story as the unmasking of a concrete Iranian-run network. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung offers a leaner, more factual account that stresses the geopolitical backdrop - that the base had previously hosted American bombers striking targets in Iran - implying a possible motive of retaliation by Tehran. The Guardian, in Helena Horton's report, widens the lens beyond this single case, quoting British counter-terrorism officials who say Iran has directed "a range of incidents" of hostile activity in Britain in recent months, framing the plot as part of a broader pattern. The Washington Post, in Sammy Westfall's report, takes a similarly broad but more cautious approach, quoting an official assessment that authorities are "confident that this activity was conducted on behalf of a foreign intelligence service" while noting that some circumstances remain unclear, and likewise situating the case within wider warnings about Iran's growing use of proxies to destabilize the UK.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Guardian, The Washington Post
Citations (4)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9

Technology & Media 4 sources · 2 languages

AI economics and Anthropic's IPO

Coverage of AI economics splits between hard-nosed financial skepticism and broader philosophical framing. In her column in The Daily Telegraph, Izabella Kaminska questions whether the vast sums poured into AI computing infrastructure will ever generate adequate returns, drawing on historic productivity paradoxes to suggest the boom could prove a poor investment. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a piece by Ann-Kathrin Nezik, focuses concretely on Anthropic's IPO, detailing its effective-altruism-shaped governance, its ties to major backers like Amazon, and whether a successful listing might pave the way for rival OpenAI to follow. Die Welt offers the most detailed financial treatment through two voices: in his column there, Holger Zschäpitz digs into Anthropic's prospectus, highlighting explosive revenue growth alongside enormous compute commitments, and frames the IPO as a high-stakes bet on exponential AI value growth, while also flagging risks such as "blackmail-like" AI behavior documented in the filing. An unsigned analysis in Die Welt takes a more cautious investor-protection stance, warning that a company should never be priced above what its actual growth justifies, while treating the disclosed behavioral risk factors as serious but not proof of impending catastrophe. By contrast, The Guardian steps entirely outside the financial frame: in an interview, novelist Jeanette Winterson argues AI is an evolutionary leap comparable to the Industrial Revolution, insisting that the true danger lies not in the technology itself but in outdated economic models and whether "our masters" choose to distribute its gains fairly.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Die Welt, The Guardian, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (5)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 21

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Dieser Report zeigt die wahre Dimension…"

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3 — "Anthropic-Börsengang: Risiken und Bewertung im Prospekt"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 48

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Domestic Politics 3 sources · 2 languages

Fallout of Lula's election victory in Brazil

Coverage of Lula's victory splits into distinct strands. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung offers two angles: one roundup of foreign commentary from Le Monde, El Periódico and The Times frames the result as a major geopolitical moment that halts Latin America's rightward drift and derails the White House's hopes of a regional "Trump effect," while acknowledging Lula inherits a deeply divided country and a fragile economy; a separate piece, bylined tjb., instead zeroes in on markets, reporting a sharp plunge in Brazilian stocks and the currency as investors react to fears of worsening public finances and rising debt. In a Süddeutsche Zeitung piece, Jan Heidtmann takes a domestic political angle, profiling André Janones as the digital-strategy architect behind the social-media mobilization that helped deliver Lula's win over Bolsonaro's far-right camp. By contrast, in a Globe and Mail column Ingrid Bejerman broadens the lens to foreign policy, arguing that Brazil skillfully balances relations among competing global powers rather than aligning with one camp, and criticizes Canada for underestimating Brazil as a mere resource exporter instead of deepening strategic ties.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (4)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Stimmen der anderen: Der Rechtsruck in…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 25 — "Warum Brasiliens Börse nach Lulas Wahlsieg…"

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Security & Conflict

3 sources · 2 languages

Local ceasefire in Oleshky and Ukraine peace efforts

All three sources report the same event - a localized humanitarian ceasefire around the Russian-occupied city of Oleshky, brokered with US involvement including Melania Trump, enabling civilian evacuation and aid delivery - but each frames it differently. In Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Reinhard Veser focuses on the dire humanitarian conditions on the ground and cautions that the ceasefire carries a propaganda dimension for both Moscow and Kyiv, adopting a skeptical, careful tone. The Globe and Mail offers a more straightforwardly factual account, emphasizing confirmation of the ceasefire by both Russian and Ukrainian negotiators and situating it within broader diplomatic efforts toward eventual trilateral peace talks, without dwelling on the humanitarian dynamics. The Guardian, in a piece by Luke Harding and Pjotr Sauer, widens the lens further, pairing the local ceasefire with a "frank" call between Nordic leaders and Putin, and foregrounds the divisions among European states over how to engage Russia, quoting a skeptical voice warning that Russia shows no genuine interest in peace - all while noting continued Russian bombardment of Kyiv and other regions. Where the German and Canadian coverage presents the ceasefire mainly as a discrete humanitarian step, The Guardian embeds it within a tense and fractured wider diplomatic picture.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Globe and Mail, The Guardian
Citations (3)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 31

Diplomacy & International Relations 3 sources · 1 language

Germany's Indo-Pacific policy and trade ties

Coverage of Chancellor Merz's Asia trip converges on his proposal for a loose Indo-Pacific alliance to counterbalance dependence on the US and China, but each outlet frames it differently. Die Welt, in Hans von der Burchard's piece, foregrounds Merz's warning directed at Germans themselves - that unless Germany "sits at the table" it will end up "on the menu" - framing the trip chiefly as a push for an independent German-European stance vis-à-vis both Russia and China. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung covers the story twice: one report factually details Merz's push for a trade deal with CPTPP/ASEAN states and his declared "maturing" China policy, while a second, bylined by Hendrik Ankenbrand and Julia Löhr, goes deeper into the shift from "partnership" to "de-risking" toward China, explicitly tying the harder tone to Chinese overcapacity, currency undervaluation, and Beijing's support for Russia. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a column by Daniel Brössler, centers on Merz's vision of a broad interregional "super alliance" with Trans-Pacific Partnership members, also noting his call for China to use its leverage toward a "just peace" in Ukraine and his warning against overdependence on great powers. By contrast, Berthold Kohler's column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung does not engage with the substance of foreign or trade policy at all, instead using Merz's Asia trip merely as a satirical hook for criticizing his party's handling of internal personnel politics amid the search for a presidential candidate - a notably different angle from the policy-focused pieces.

Sources: Die Welt, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (5)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Der Kanzler in der Botanik"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Merz für Handelspakt mit Pazifikregion"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15 — "Merz wirbt in Singapur für neue…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6

Security & Conflict

2 sources · 2 languages

Russian repression and war crimes in occupied Ukraine

The two sources document very different facets of Russian conduct toward Ukraine. In her Die Welt report, Lily Hyde focuses on daily life under occupation, detailing forced passportization, arbitrary detentions, property confiscation and cultural Russification, and cites Freedom House's ranking of the occupied territories as having conditions worse than North Korea or Gaza, emphasizing the unprecedented scale of documentation behind this system of repression. Edith M. Lederer, writing for the Los Angeles Times, instead reports on the findings of a U.N.-backed inquiry that Russia committed war crimes and crimes against humanity by deliberately attacking Ukraine's energy infrastructure, leaving millions without power and heat in freezing conditions, and through deceptive recruitment of foreign fighters. Where Die Welt's account centers on the internal machinery of control over occupied civilian populations, the Los Angeles Times foregrounds the international legal dimension of accountability for infrastructure attacks - together the two pieces sketch a broader pattern of systematic Russian policy spanning both the occupied rear and the active front of the war.

Sources: Die Welt, Los Angeles Times

Citations (2)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 5

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Security & Conflict 2 sources · 2 languages

Jordan's airstrikes in Syria over church attack

Both outlets offer straightforward factual reporting on Jordan's retaliatory airstrikes in Syria rather than opinionated commentary. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung foregrounds the official Jordanian military account - that the strikes targeted hideouts of suspected terrorist organisations in southern Syria, were reportedly coordinated with the Syrian government, and killed at least eight people according to monitoring groups - and ties this directly to the church attack in Jordan's Karak governorate. The Guardian adds further detail and nuance: it specifies that the attacked church was Greek Orthodox and that nine people were killed, reports the arrest of three suspects following a shootout, and highlights the contradictory accounts emerging from Syria about whether the border was crossed and how many casualties resulted - a layer of uncertainty absent from the German report. Where Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung emphasises cross-border coordination and the official Jordanian narrative, The Guardian presents a messier, more contested picture of events on the ground.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, The Guardian

Citations (2)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 28

Diplomacy & International Relations 2 sources · 2 languages

Mbappé's Mao joke sparks China-France controversy

Coverage of this episode splits between straight institutional reporting and ideological commentary. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in a piece by Gregor Scheu, reports how an offhand remark by Kylian Mbappé about an internet meme comparing him to Mao Zedong escalated into a genuine diplomatic and economic affair, with sponsors cancelling contracts and China's foreign ministry issuing a formal warning that "expressions and actions that hurt the feelings of the Chinese people will meet the joint resistance of the Chinese people." The Daily Telegraph, by contrast, treats the episode not as a sports-and-culture story but as a springboard for a broader argument: the author contends that Mbappé's description of Mao as a dictator was simply historically accurate, and that China cannot accept this because it would undermine the Communist Party's founding myth. From there the piece widens into a general warning about the dangers of distorting history for present-day political purposes, linking the Mbappé case to debates over slavery reparations and to Britain's own vulnerabilities vis-à-vis hostile powers. Where Süddeutsche Zeitung documents the chain reaction inside China, The Daily Telegraph uses the controversy as a launchpad for ideological critique of attempts to control historical narrative.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (2)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 22

Domestic Politics 2 sources · 1 language

Serbia: Vucic's defeat and the student movement

All three pieces treat Vucic's electoral defeat as a watershed, but they diverge sharply on what exactly has triumphed in his place. Die Welt, in a piece by Carolina Drüten, frames the story above all as a blow to Russian influence - casting Vucic as "Putin's last friend in Europe" now ousted - while cautioning that the hopes Brussels is pinning on the heterogeneous, inexperienced student movement may prove premature, especially given Moscow's continued efforts to hold onto influence in Serbia. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung publishes two starkly contrasting columns on the same event. Michael Martens takes the harshest view, arguing that the victorious student movement's own foreign-policy program is deeply nationalist and historically blind - rejecting Kosovo's statehood, opposing sanctions on Russia, and seeking partnership with Moscow and Beijing - and warning that any attempt to realize it would inevitably stoke new regional conflicts, directly complicating the hopeful European narrative found in Die Welt. By contrast, Luca Vazgec, also writing in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, strikes a celebratory tone, portraying the student list's victory as the overdue collapse of Vucic's "mafia-like" and corrupt regime, and describing the dancing in Belgrade as Serbia reclaiming its identity from both nationalist and defeatist narratives - though even he acknowledges serious challenges lie ahead for the new leadership. The result is an internal tension within Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung itself, with Vazgec celebrating the political upheaval while Martens explicitly warns against the ideological substance behind it.

Sources: Die Welt, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (3)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 5

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 8 — "Ein Programm voller Nationalismus"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 11 — "Vučić ist abgewählt, auf den Trümmern…"

Diplomacy & International Relations

2 sources · 1 language

UK-EU free movement debate post-Brexit

The two British outlets approach the same emerging story from opposite poles. The Guardian, in a news report by Jessica Elgot, covers it as a developing political story, noting that British officials have opened talks with the EU on a long-term relationship that could include a return to free movement, while quoting the business secretary's assurance that the public will have the final say and flagging warnings from Labour MPs wary of reopening Brexit divisions. By contrast, in his column in The Daily Telegraph, Tom Harris pre-emptively rejects any such move, arguing that free movement was undemocratic to begin with, depressed wages for British workers, and would compound an already severe housing and employment crisis if reinstated. Where The Guardian frames the issue as an open, still-undecided policy question, Harris in The Daily Telegraph treats it as a looming danger to be resisted outright.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph, The Guardian
Citations (2)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 14

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Migration & Society 2 sources · 1 language

EU's Frontex expansion and border policy

All three articles, all from the German press, cover the same European Commission proposal to massively expand Frontex's budget and powers, but they differ in depth and emphasis. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung first flags the core tension in a brief news item - the agency is to be built up while its oversight function is weakened - and then, in a detailed analysis by Thomas Gutschker, develops this critical angle further, warning that Frontex risks becoming a de facto European deportation agency, a kind of "European ICE," operating even in third countries while fundamental-rights oversight is curtailed. Süddeutsche Zeitung, in Josef Kelnberger's report, focuses more on the operational scope of the plan, describing how Frontex would become a central EU deportation agency coordinating removals across Europe, potentially through deals with countries like Rwanda and Uganda to host deportation centers. Where Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung foregrounds the democratic and rights-based concerns about diminished accountability,

Süddeutsche Zeitung emphasizes the practical and geographic reach of the scheme and its implementation with third countries.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (3)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Mehr Macht für Frontex"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4 — "Mehr Abschiebungen, weniger Grundrechtekontrolle"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1

Society & Culture

2 sources · 1 language

New antisemitism and anti-Israel discourse in the West

Die Welt and Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung approach this topic from quite different angles. In Die Welt, Marc Reichwein presents Eva Illouz's thesis in a book review, arguing that a new alliance between radical-left and Islamist circles has turned Israel into an enemy image, with the warning that this hostility could eventually extend to the West as a whole. In a separate column in the same paper, Alan Posener takes a more historical-philosophical approach, arguing that industrial violence did not begin with the Nazis but was already embedded in European colonial practice, while warning against using such comparisons to relativize the Holocaust or to fuel contemporary antisemitic rhetoric invoking "the liberation of Palestine" as "the beginning of the liberation of the world." Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, by contrast, concentrates on documenting concrete institutional cases of antisemitism in Germany and beyond: unsigned reporting on the Berlin Left Party's internal rupture over MP Vanessa Emde, who denies Israel's right to exist; a factual report on the BBC's large settlement payment to a Jewish producer who alleged discrimination after October 7; an interview in which TU Berlin's president defends the scientific independence of the Center for Antisemitism Research against accusations of bias; and a report by Theresa Weiß on the opening of Frankfurt's new Jewish Academy as a response to rising antisemitism. In a sharper column in the same paper, Johannes Becke argues that German Middle Eastern studies have become radicalized and one-sided since the Hamas massacre, marginalizing Jewish and Israel Studies scholars. In a further interview conducted by Alexander Jürgs, the Jewish Academy's incoming leaders describe the institution's explicitly pro-Israel, pro-Zionist stance while also emphasizing space for internal Jewish debate, declaring "we are here, and we will not be driven out." Where Die Welt offers a broad ideological and historical framing of the phenomenon, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung assembles a mosaic of concrete institutional flashpoints in politics, media, academia and Jewish communal life in Germany and Britain.

Sources: Die Welt, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (8)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 14 — "Über die Ursprünge des neuen Antisemitismus…"

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 14 — "Die Nazis haben die Barbarei nicht…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4 — "Die Suche nach einer gemeinsamen Arbeitsgrundlage…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4 — "Die neue Jüdische Akademie soll wissen…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13 — "BBC zahlt jüdischer Produzentin nach Antisemitismusvorwürfen…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 32 — "„Wir wollen mit wenig viel erreichen“…"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 32 — "Wissenschaftsfreiheit? Nur für uns selbst!"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 40 — "„Wir sind hier, und wir lassen…"

Domestic Politics 2 sources · 1 language

German presidential succession politics

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung provides the core reporting on the maneuvering over Steinmeier's succession: a piece by Eckart Lohse, Mona Jaeger and Timo Steppat presents Ines Claus as the surprise "favorite of the hour," backed by Merz, and details the bargaining between CDU/CSU and SPD. Alongside this, in a column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Berthold Kohler reacts to the same process with irony, arguing that personnel policy cannot be a chancellor's "niche hobby," and pointedly jabs at Merz's trip to Asia amid the ongoing negotiations - so the paper combines straight political reporting with a sharply critical personal commentary on the same events. By contrast, in a column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Roman Deininger broadens the discussion beyond intra-party horse-trading, arguing that Germany needs not a weak compromise candidate but a credible broker between the center-left and center-right capable of countering the AfD's rise, and puts forward Ilse Aigner as a plausible, grounded choice - shifting the focus from CDU infighting to the larger societal question of what the presidency should deliver for a polarized Germany.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (3)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Der Kanzler in der Botanik"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Des Kanzlers neue Kandidatin – Ines…"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Trade & Economics

2 sources · 1 language

Audi's US investment amid German job cuts

All three pieces, from German newspapers, address the same episode - Audi CEO Gernot Döllner's appearance at a Trump event tied to a four-billion-dollar US factory investment even as jobs are being cut in Germany - but frame it quite differently. In Süddeutsche Zeitung, Christina Kunkel and Stephan Radomsky focus on the public backlash against Döllner, arguing that his courting of Trump could prove his biggest political and moral misstep given domestic labor conflicts and tariff pressure on German carmakers. In a separate column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Detlef Esslinger offers a more mitigating reading, arguing Döllner was essentially coerced by Trump into publicly backing the Georgia plant to avoid tariffs, so criticizing his awkward public appearance is too easy given the real pressure he faced. The sharpest condemnation comes from a reader, Klaus Huhnen, in a letter to Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, who denounces Döllner in stark moral terms, calling the announcement having reached "rock bottom of decency" and an electoral favor to Trump ahead of the midterms, even suggesting Döllner should personally question his own character.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (3)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4 — "Audi (Döllner/Trump Erpressung)"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 14 — "Der Mann, auf den viele sauer…"

Domestic Politics 2 sources · 1 language

US midterm elections and market impact

Coverage of this topic splits along two quite different axes. The Guardian focuses on the political stakes themselves: in his piece, David Smith frames the midterms as a referendum on Trump's presidency, with control of Congress and dozens of governorships on the line, while a companion explainer in The Guardian goes further into the key Senate, House and gubernatorial races, voter concerns, and Trump's attempts to cast doubt on the vote through misleading claims about election integrity. The Globe and Mail, by contrast, takes a financial-markets angle: in his column, David Berman argues that the intense public and investor focus on the midterms and on Trump's influence is overstated, since historical data show midterm outcomes have had little lasting effect on stock market performance, and he urges investors to tune out the political noise. Where The Guardian treats the election as a consequential democratic event, the Globe and Mail frames it as largely immaterial for markets.

Sources: The Globe and Mail, The Guardian

Citations (3)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 29

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 26 — "Midterms roles cutting as America races…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 27 — "What's at stake in the US…"

Security & Conflict 2 sources · 1 language

Calls to restrain Trump on Iran after midterms

The two Guardian items are in fact the same column by Simon Tisdall and therefore count as a single voice: he warns that once the US midterms are over, Trump will be freed from electoral restraint and, together with Netanyahu, will pursue a vendetta-driven assault on Iran that is unlikely to succeed but certain to produce regional and global catastrophe, and he calls on Britain, Europe and the world's democracies to urgently unite to rein in both leaders and push diplomacy instead of war - insisting flatly that "Trump is not king of the world" and that "Netanyahu can't do as he likes with impunity." By contrast, in her Los Angeles Times column Jill Lawrence approaches the subject from a domestic American angle: she urges Democrats, if they win Congress, to pursue accountability for Trump-era corruption and to reverse harmful policies, including what she calls the "inflationary war on Iran" - a brief, passing mention within a broader domestic policy agenda rather than Tisdall's international call to actively restrain Trump's foreign policy.

Sources: The Guardian, Los Angeles Times

Citations (3)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 57 — "Trump is about to be unleashed…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 58 — "Trump is about to be unleashed…"

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Russia's recruitment of African fighters

This topic is covered by a single source. In the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Claudia Bröll and Friedrich Schmidt expose a gap between the anti-colonial rhetoric staged at Russia-Africa summits and the underlying reality: hundreds of Africans, some recruited through deception or coercion, being sent to fight and die on the Ukraine front. The authors argue that this summit and media propaganda functions specifically to obscure the neocolonial character of Putin's war of aggression behind a performance of African solidarity. With no other outlet weighing in, there is no competing framing to compare, but the piece stands out for casting Russian-African cooperation as disguised exploitation rather than genuine partnership.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

UK defence spending and Russia threat

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, in an opinion column. Writing in The Daily Telegraph, Hamish de Bretton-Gordon argues that the British government is artificially inflating its defence spending figures by folding in intelligence and pension budgets, calling it an accounting trick that will not fool Putin or NATO. He insists that Putin will judge Britain by its real military capability rather than by a spreadsheet, and warns that behind the inflated numbers lies a dangerously depleted actual fighting capacity. With no other source addressing the issue, there is no competing angle or comparison to draw.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

German debate on Ukraine aid vs. welfare spending

As this topic is covered by only a single source, there is no cross-newspaper contrast to draw. Die Welt reports on Sahra Wagenknecht, leader of the BSW party, pushing back against accusations that her party is pro-Russian. She argues that branding peace advocates as "friends of Russia" only stokes war sentiment, and calls on Germans to question whether continued funding of military support for Ukraine is justified - implicitly framing the issue as a trade-off against domestic welfare spending.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Letters on Russia's historical treaty violations

Two letters to the editor in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung respond to the same article on Russia's history of treaty violations, but push in different directions. In his letter, Udo Staber argues the original piece failed to address the ideological scaffolding behind Putin's expansionism, pointing to the fascist philosopher Ivan Ilyin and to Timothy Snyder's analysis to explain Russia's drive to extend dominance westward, and criticizes the AfD and BSW for echoing Kremlin talking points. In a separate letter, Nico Kreh pushes back against singling out Russia at all, noting that France, Germany, and other great powers have likewise broken treaties after military defeats - yet he arrives at a similarly bleak practical conclusion, contending that Russia's leadership always invents flimsy pretexts to void agreements, making negotiations with Putin's Russia pointless. Where Staber frames the problem as rooted in a specific, identifiable Russian ideology, Kreh frames it as a universal pattern of defeated great powers that happens to be recurring in Russia now.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (2)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6 — "Leserbrief: Imperiale Schatten"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6 — "Leserbrief: Wie andere Großmächte auch"

Security & Conflict · 1 source · 1 language

North Korea-South Korea/US tensions

This topic is covered by a single source. The Daily Telegraph, in a report by Allegra Mendelson, offers a factual account of North Korea moving howitzers to the border with South Korea and issuing anti-American slogans, framed against the backdrop of rising tensions following a mine explosion in the demilitarized zone. The piece underscores Pyongyang's apparent lack of interest in engaging with Washington, quoting hostile rhetoric directed at the United States, but does not offer additional interpretive framing beyond describing the military escalation on the ground.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Diplomacy & International Relations · 1 source · 1 language

UK MPs detained, barred from West Bank

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, in an unsigned report that leads with the British and Scottish MPs' own account of being detained and interrogated for over eight hours and denied entry to the West Bank while trying to meet Palestinian civil society groups and join an olive harvest, including complaints of degrading treatment. The article does include Israel's response - that the delegation gave false information about the purpose of its visit - but the dominant frame, set from the headline onward, is the MPs' narrative of mistreatment rather than a neutral institutional account.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Criticism of Russia sanctions and call for European strength

All three articles on this topic come from Die Welt, but they offer two distinct strands of criticism. Two pieces cover the same interview with economist Hans-Werner Sinn, who argues that Western sanctions against Russia are "so cleverly designed" that they damage Germany's economy while actually boosting America's, since Germany now has to buy expensive American energy instead of Russian supplies; he calls for building a strong European political-military union capable of negotiating with Russia from a position of strength while continuing to back Ukraine's defense, and simultaneously attacks Trump's America as a "dangerous fellow" cornered by overindebtedness and de-dollarization, demanding economic reforms and a reversal of Merkel-era policies in Germany. By contrast, in a column in Die Welt, Frauke Rostalski takes a quite different, domestically focused angle: she criticizes Chancellor Merz for raising questions of distributive justice selectively, around health insurance, while avoiding the more sensitive question of whether massive Ukraine aid spending is justified against cuts to pensions and long-term care. Where Sinn frames his critique around a broad geopolitical-economic argument for European strength vis-à-vis both Russia and the United States, Rostalski narrows the debate to domestic fairness, demanding an open, substantive public discussion of the cost of Ukraine aid rather than dismissing critics as uninformed.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (3)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Sinns radikale Idee mit Japan für…"

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3 — "Sinn: USA leben über ihre Verhältnisse,…"

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 7 — "Die brisante Frage nach Gerechtigkeit"

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Iran sanctions evasion and UK property

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. The Daily Telegraph, in a report by Pui-Guan Man, describes an Iranian businessman sanctioned over alleged financing of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps and his role as a financial fixer for Supreme Leader Khamenei's family, who is now contesting UK authorities' move to force the sale of his £12 million London flat. The piece frames the case within a broader narrative of a sprawling global asset network serving Iranian regime elites, highlighting efforts to evade British sanctions enforcement through high-end London property.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 7

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Far-right politics and protest violence in Spain

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. In a byline piece for The Daily Telegraph, Lily Shanagher reports on the riots at a Bilbao university triggered by a planned talk from far-right provocateur Vito Quiles, dubbed "Spain's Charlie Kirk," detailing the arrests and arson that accompanied the unrest. The article situates Quiles within a broader trend of confrontational, American-inspired political showmanship, citing academics who criticise him for relying on provocation rather than substantive argument rather than presenting the episode as a simple law-and-order story.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 12

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

King Charles's Caribbean tour and slavery reparations debate

This topic is covered by a single source. In her Daily Telegraph article, Hannah Furness reports on King Charles's Caribbean tour, during which he acknowledged the "great suffering" of the past linked to slavery and the Royal family's historical ties to the slave trade. The piece frames the visit as a careful balancing act between symbolic acknowledgement and avoidance of concrete commitment, noting that even as the King spoke of past suffering, the British Government explicitly ruled out paying reparations despite pressure from reparations campaigners. With no other source addressing the story, there is no competing angle to compare, but the article itself highlights the tension between royal symbolism and government policy on the issue.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Trump accused of rape amid Epstein investigation

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, in a report by Ben Stockton, which details a new House Democrats report alleging that Donald Trump raped a former Miss Switzerland in 1993, framed as part of a wider investigation into his alleged ties to Jeffrey Epstein's crimes. The article lays out the graphic details of the accusation alongside the White House's firm denial, but with no parallel coverage from other sources there is no alternative framing to compare - whether in how credible the allegation is treated, how much weight is given to the political timing of the Democrats' report, or how the story is situated within the broader Epstein saga.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Maritime security and supply chain vulnerabilities

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, so there is no cross-source disagreement to trace, only a single columnist's perspective. In his column in The Daily Telegraph, Oliver Harvey warns that Britain, despite its deep dependence on maritime trade and undersea infrastructure, faces mounting geopolitical risks from blockades, sabotage and the erosion of international maritime law. He criticizes the UK government for moving too slowly to build a comprehensive economic security strategy to counter these threats, framing the situation as emblematic of Britain's declining grip on the maritime dominance it once took for granted.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 21

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

Brexit and the small-boats migration crisis

Both letters appear in The Daily Telegraph and share a common target - the claim that Brexit is to blame for the small-boats crisis - but each attacks it from a different angle. In his letter, Mike Denman argues that lingering resentment among Remainers and officials leads them to wrongly pin the crisis on Brexit, when the real drivers are regional conflicts, political repression, economic instability and human-smuggling networks, and he warns that blaming Brexit is merely a convenient distraction from the practical enforcement measures actually needed. James Hogg, writing in a letter to The Daily Telegraph, takes a narrower, more data-driven approach, directly rebutting the Prime Minister's claim by pointing out that under the EU's Dublin Regulation, Britain routinely accepted more asylum transfers than it successfully returned - suggesting that EU membership was no better at controlling the crisis than the post-Brexit arrangement. So while Denman offers a broad structural explanation for the crisis, Hogg counters the government's framing with a specific historical fact about how the Dublin system actually worked.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (2)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15 — "Consequences of the failure to accept…"

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15 — "Letter on small-boats crisis and EU…"

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

UK energy policy and preparedness crisis

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, and solely through an opinion piece. In her column, Allison Pearson argues that Labour's net zero policies, the closure of refineries and broader mismanagement of Britain's energy system have produced a genuine supply and energy crisis, to the point that ordinary Britons are being forced to "prep" for blackouts and shortages. She accuses the government of shamelessly passing the buck to the public, making them compensate for what she calls grotesque governmental ineptitude rather than owning the consequences of its own policy choices. With no other source weighing in, there is no cross-outlet contrast to draw here - only a sharply polemical framing that casts the energy crisis as a direct, self-inflicted failure of government policy.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 63

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Pro-Palestine activism in music and culture

This topic is covered only by The Daily Telegraph, which reports critically on a Dublin concert that it says turned into a pro-Palestine rally: Macklemore performed a song about a Gaza child killed by the IDF and described Israel as "a state that's gotta rely on an apartheid system," while Kneecap led chants of "Free Palestine" and referenced Gaza scholarship students. With no other outlets covering this event, there is no comparative angle to draw, but the framing - foregrounding the performers' pointed political language - conveys a skeptical stance toward the politicization of the concert stage.

Sources: The Daily Telegraph
Citations (1)

The Daily Telegraph, Oct 28, 2026, p. 67

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Trump administration's legal action against Comey

Only one source covers this topic. Die Welt offers a factual, straightforward report on the Trump administration's renewed legal action against former FBI Director James Comey over his alleged disclosure of national security information to The New York Times. The piece frames the development less as an isolated event and more as part of a recurring pattern, pointedly noting that this is already the third time in Trump's second term that the administration has moved against Comey.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

Fears of unrest at pro-Palestinian protests in Germany

This topic is covered only by Die Welt, which reports on a warning from the Central Council of Jews in Germany that violent unrest could erupt at pro-Palestinian protests planned in at least 23 German cities. The article, built around the Council's own framing, adopts its characterization of the rhetoric used at these protests as "highly prone to violence" and highlights the Council's claim of links between pro-Palestinian circles and criminal networks. With no other source weighing in, there is no competing or skeptical angle presented here - the coverage largely channels the institutional warning itself rather than subjecting it to independent scrutiny.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Poland's security and domestic violence concerns

This topic is covered by a single source. In his column in Die Welt, Philipp Fritz offers a two-sided view: on one hand, Poland remains, statistically, among the safest countries in Europe, despite being more exposed than any other nation to Russian hybrid warfare - sabotage, espionage and arson attacks. On the other hand, he warns that a recent spate of knife attacks by Polish youths points to a domestic potential for violence that cannot simply be pinned on migration policy, but instead calls for prevention and education. The piece thus avoids a simplistic narrative, combining the external threat with an internal, homegrown problem.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

AI-accelerated cyberattacks and global security gaps

This topic is covered only by Die Welt, in a column by Benedikt Fuest. He argues that AI-powered tools are fundamentally shifting the balance of cybersecurity by uncovering vulnerabilities in widely used software such as PHP far faster than human researchers can, to the point of breaking down established coordinated-disclosure mechanisms. He contends this creates a geopolitical imbalance favoring the United States, since the leading AI companies are based there and receive days of advance warning, while European authorities are left out of the loop and informed only belatedly. With no other source addressing the subject, there are no competing angles to compare - only the position laid out in Benedikt Fuest's column for Die Welt.

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Youth violence near Potsdam

This topic is covered by a single source. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung reports factually on youth groups storming parties and beating people in the area just outside Berlin near Potsdam, framing it as a wave of violence that is causing growing fear among local residents. The piece reads as straightforward reporting rather than opinion, and since no other source addresses the same incidents, there is no cross-source contrast to draw.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

Migration policy debates in Berlin/Germany

Only one source, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, addresses this topic, taking a sharply critical stance toward the migration and "invitation" policy reportedly planned by a possible left-wing government in Berlin. The piece warns that generous admission programs for migrants and plans to grant foreigners voting rights, framed under the banner of humanity and integration, risk undermining the rule of law and could recreate the very conditions that originally fueled the rise of the AfD. With no other outlet covering this story, there is no competing angle or counter-framing to compare it against.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Latino voters in US midterms

This topic is covered by only one source. In her report in the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Sofia Dreisbach examines the political mood among Latino voters in Pennsylvania's Lehigh Valley, many of whom backed Trump in 2024 but now express frustration with his administration's decisions. She cites recent polling suggesting the pendulum could swing back toward the Democrats ahead of the midterm congressional elections. With no other outlet addressing this story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Orbán as potential UN Secretary-General candidate

Both articles on this topic come from the same newspaper, Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, offering complementary angles rather than competing ones. In the reporting piece, Majid Sattar presents it as a confirmed development, sourced to officials from three UN member states, that the Trump administration has backed Viktor Orbán to succeed António Guterres as UN Secretary-General - a move he frames as highly unconventional given Orbán's record of blocking EU sanctions against Russia, noting that Russia and China appear receptive while France and Britain's positions remain unclear. By contrast, in his column for Frankfurter

Allgemeine Zeitung, Stephan Löwenstein voices explicit alarm at the prospect of the US, Russia and China converging behind Orbán, calling it a worrying sign of growing autocratic influence over the UN, while pointedly referencing Orbán's record of alleged corruption and abuse of power in Hungary and noting that France and Britain's veto power could still block the move.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (2)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Orbán als Guterres-Nachfolger?"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 8 — "Europas Interesse II"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Antisemitism dispute within Germany's Left Party

This topic is covered by a single source. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung reports on the internal dispute within Berlin's Left Party faction over MP Vanessa Emde, who denies Israel's right to exist and has criticized the party's stance against antisemitism. The article quotes the faction's declaration that it sees no common basis for cooperating with her, framing the episode as an intra-party crisis over the limits of political legitimacy on the question of Israel, without offering a competing angle from another source.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Serbian nationalism and Kosovo in student movement

As only a single source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source comparison to draw. In his column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Michael Martens warns that the victorious Serbian student movement's foreign-policy program is steeped in nationalism and historically blind, rejecting Kosovo's statehood, opposing sanctions on Russia, and seeking closer partnership with Russia and China. He characterizes it as a backward-looking document whose implementation would inevitably stoke new conflicts in the region.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 8

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Tanzania opposition crackdown

This topic is covered by a single source: an article signed by clb. in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, which recounts the imprisonment of Tanzanian opposition leader Tundu Lissu, charged with treason and facing a possible death sentence after calling for an election boycott. The piece details his hunger strike, the government's crackdown on protests, the deaths of more than 500 people from "unnatural causes" according to a government-appointed inquiry commission, and the resulting international condemnation, including resolutions from the European Parliament. With no other outlet covering the story, there is no competing framing to compare - the report simply presents the events as a case of systematic repression drawing diplomatic pressure abroad.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 5

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

German far-right cultural politics (AfD)

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column for Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Hubert Spiegel offers a critical, distanced account of AfD politician Matthias Helferich's "culture walk" in Düsseldorf, highlighting how its völkisch-nationalist rhetoric seeks to frame a "cultural politics from the right" that echoes Nazi-era concepts such as "strength through joy." Spiegel's narrative also notes the counter-demonstrators and police accompanying the event, closing on an ironic remark that Germans now apparently need strong nerves just to follow reasonably decent politics.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

European role in Ukraine-Russia negotiations

As only a single source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to report, but rather one sharply argued position. In his column in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Nikolas Busse criticizes European leaders for allowing Trump to negotiate with Putin over Ukraine and the continent's security without Europe itself playing a meaningful role. He argues that Europe should instead have pursued its own direct dialogue with Putin, since Trump cannot be relied upon as a guardian of European interests, and that Europe's passive stance only makes it easier for Putin and Trump to shape outcomes without it.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 8

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Global youth protest movements

Only one article addresses this topic, a signed piece in the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung by Anna-Lena Malter. Malter surveys a wave of youth protests stretching from Milan to Kathmandu and identifies a shared undercurrent - a diffuse sense among young people that their generation is being made to pay for broader inequality and for corrupt elites. Yet her analysis resists treating these movements as a single phenomenon: she stresses that the demands, organizational forms and political outcomes vary considerably from country to country, and argues that a common symbol or slogan is not enough to produce lasting political change - that requires organization, patience and durable structures. Since no other source in this set covers the topic, there is no competing newspaper framing to contrast here, only Malter's own carefully qualified argument.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 12

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

German metal industry wage dispute

This topic is covered by a single source. In her article for the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Hanna Decker reports on the escalating wage dispute between the IG Metall union and employers in the metal and electrical industry, centering the union's rejection of the latest pay offer as inadequate and its threat of strikes. The piece frames the conflict largely from the workers' side, quoting the union's warning that the employers' offer secures neither purchasing power nor the future of production sites, against the backdrop of the sector's deep structural crisis.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 17

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

EU single market and capital markets union reforms

This topic is covered only by Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in a column by Hendrik Kafsack. He argues that while the European Commission has put forward proposals to cut bureaucracy and advance capital markets integration, member states have hollowed out key elements such as the "EU Inc." company model and the joint capital markets supervision package, leaving the EU unable to generate the dynamism needed to compete with the United States and China. Since no other source addresses this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - only the author's pointed critique that the EU is signaling its inability to truly change course even under mounting economic pressure.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

European refinery capacity and defense fuel security

This topic is covered solely by Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, which reports that European refinery capacity for diesel and kerosene has shrunk sharply since 2009 even as demand remains high, raising concerns about security of supply. The article frames the issue explicitly as a defense-strategic matter rather than merely an economic one: EU officials and NATO now regard reliable access to militarily relevant fuels, above all diesel and kerosene, as a decisive element in strengthening

Europe's defense capability, while industry representatives call for long-term investment guarantees rather than short-term fixes.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 17

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Controversy over human rights award to Reza Pahlavi

This topic is covered only by Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in an unsigned report on the controversy surrounding the Friedrich Naumann Foundation's decision to award its Freedom Prize to Reza Pahlavi, son of Iran's last Shah. The article centers on the objections raised by critics - former Iranian political prisoners, diaspora organizations, and prominent politicians - who argue that Pahlavi lacks democratic legitimacy, having never been elected by the Iranian people, and that he has failed to clearly distance himself from the abuses of his father's regime. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung also presents the foundation's own defense, which insists the award honors the Iranian people as a whole rather than Pahlavi personally. With no other source weighing in on the story, there is no cross-publication contrast to draw; the coverage itself is structured as a fairly balanced juxtaposition of critics' and defenders' views within a single piece.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 41

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

California billionaire wealth tax debate

Coverage of this topic comes from two pieces by the same journalist, Winand von Petersdorff, in Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, offering complementary rather than competing angles. His news report lays out the arguments on both sides of California's proposed one-time five-percent wealth tax on billionaires, weighing supporters' concerns about tax-code unfairness against opponents' warnings of billionaire flight, and noting economists' disagreement over who ultimately gains or loses from such a levy. In a separate opinion column, von Petersdorff takes a more personally skeptical stance, arguing that although the US tax system genuinely favors billionaires unfairly, this does not automatically justify a one-time wealth levy - since, in his view, both billionaires and the state apparatus share an insatiable appetite for money. The straight report thus maintains balance between the two sides, while the column injects a pointed skepticism toward both the ultra-wealthy and the state's own fiscal hunger.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (2)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15 — "Geld her! (Kalifornien und die Milliardärssteuer)"

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 16 — "Kalifornien probt den Aufstand gegen die…"

Diplomacy & International Relations · 1 source · 1 language

Canada-EU relations deepening

This topic is covered only by The Globe and Mail, in a report by Steven Chase, which describes Canadian and EU officials outlining plans to deepen trade, defence, and technology ties under an "associate membership" framework short of formal EU accession. The article frames the move as part of Prime Minister Carney's broader strategy to reduce Canada's reliance on an unpredictable United States, presenting the development largely through the lens of official Canadian and European statements, without a competing perspective from another source.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Polarization in German Middle East studies academia

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column in the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Johannes Becke argues that the German association for Middle East, North Africa and Near East studies (DAWANA) has undergone a spiral of radicalization since the Hamas massacre, leaving little room for genuine scholarly pluralism. He contends that scholars in this field are systematically marginalizing colleagues in Jewish and Israel Studies while tolerating, and sometimes amplifying, antisemitic and anti-Israel rhetoric - all while invoking academic freedom only for themselves and denying it to those who disagree. As the only voice on this subject, there is no cross-publication debate to compare; rather, Becke offers a pointed, personal critique of trends within his own academic discipline.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 32

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Metro distances itself from pro-war donation in Russia

This topic is covered by a single source. Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, in an unsigned report, states that Metro's Russian subsidiary, now under forced state administration, made a one-million-ruble donation to a fund supporting Russia's war effort, money the report says is used to buy equipment the military needs at the front. The article's emphasis falls on Metro AG's defensive response in Germany, which distances itself from the decision, insisting it was not authorized by the parent company and that it no longer exercises operational control over its Russian unit. With no other outlet reporting on this story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw, but the careful framing - sharply separating the German parent from its seized Russian branch's actions - reflects a distinctly German sensitivity to any suggestion that a German corporation might be indirectly linked to financing Russia's war in Ukraine.

Sources: Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
Citations (1)

Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 22

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Toronto mayoral election

This topic is covered by a single source. In her column in The Globe and Mail, Robyn Urback offers a framing that tempers Olivia Chow's re-election victory as mayor of Toronto, arguing that her roughly 13-point margin was unusually narrow by the standards of past incumbent landslides in the city. She casts the result less as a decisive win for Chow and more as a "respectable" near-miss for challenger Brad Bradford. With no other outlet covering the race, there is no competing emphasis or counter-framing to compare it against.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Canada-UAE diplomatic and defence relations

Both articles come from the Globe and Mail and together cover Canada's deepening ties with the UAE, but with different emphases. The piece bylined by Steven Chase and Geoffrey York frames the development primarily as a diplomatic and economic win, reporting that Prime Minister Carney signed a free-trade agreement and a defence pact and agreed to begin extradition treaty talks, as part of Canada's push to attract foreign investment amid US protectionism - mentioning human-rights criticism only briefly as context. The second, unsigned article shifts the focus to the backlash from human-rights advocates, highlighting more serious allegations against the UAE, including claims it has supplied weapons to Sudan's RSF militia, and warning that "such serious allegations cannot be sidelined" as Canada pursues closer ties with Abu Dhabi. Together, the two pieces present a split framing: one treating the agreements as a diplomatic achievement, the other foregrounding the ethical and security concerns they raise.

Sources: The Globe and Mail

Citations (2)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Carney agrees to extradition treaty talks…"

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9 — "Defence co-operation agreement sparks criticism from…"

Trade & Economics

1 source · 1 language

US-Canada trade war and tariffs

All three articles on this topic come from the Globe and Mail, which covers the fallout of Trump's trade war with Canada from three complementary angles. In a piece bylined by Adrian Morrow, he describes how Michigan residents across the political spectrum are bewildered that the administration has targeted a close ally like Canada, capturing a mix of confusion and frustration from people who stress the countries' decades-long partnership. A second, unsigned article broadens the political picture, showing how the tariff fight has become a central issue in Michigan's Senate race, with candidates from both parties trying to distance themselves from Trump's trade policy given the deep cross-border economic and social ties, while also noting reported behind-the-scenes talks to lower tariffs before the election. A third, also unsigned, article narrows in on the steel dispute specifically, reporting Canadian Industry Minister Mélanie Joly's accusation that the CEO of Cleveland-Cliffs reneged on commitments to advocate for tariff-free access for Canadian steel, against the backdrop of layoffs at Stelco. Together, the three pieces build a layered portrait - human-economic, electoral-political, and corporate-industrial - of the same crisis, and since they all stem from a single source, they share a consistently Canadian-centered, critical perspective on US trade policy.

Sources: The Globe and Mail

Citations (3)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "With midterms nearing, Trump's trade fight…"

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6 — "Trade: Trump's tariff war is central…"

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 26 — "Joly points to examples of CEO…"

Trade & Economics

1 source · 1 language

Canada corporate transparency and money laundering

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. In her column in The Globe and Mail, Rita Trichur urges British Columbia's incoming premier to make fighting money laundering - what she terms "snow-washing" - a top priority, specifically by establishing a beneficial ownership registry that would expose the real individuals hiding behind shell companies. She frames the issue not merely as a local economic-crime problem but as a matter of Canada's broader economic sovereignty and national security, elevating what might otherwise seem a provincial policy question into one of national stakes. With no other outlet addressing the subject, there is no competing frame or counter-argument to compare it against.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 22

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Canada-Brazil and Latin America relations

This topic is covered by only one source. In a column in The Globe and Mail, Ingrid Bejerman argues that Canada underestimates Brazil's global significance, treating it largely as a resource exporter, when in fact Brazil has deliberately cultivated relationships across multiple competing centres of global power rather than committing to a single geopolitical camp. She uses this contrast to criticize Canadian foreign policy for remaining fixated on Washington, and calls for Canada to diversify and deepen its strategic engagement with both Brazil and Latin America more broadly. With no other newspaper addressing the subject, there is no competing framing to compare it against, but the piece stands as a pointed critique of Canada's current external priorities.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Indigenous rights and federal-provincial relations in Canada

This topic is covered by only one source. In her column in The Globe and Mail, Tanya Talaga criticizes Manitoba Premier Wab Kinew for, in her account, hijacking what was billed as a historic meeting with First Nations leaders by raising the question of abolishing the Indian Act, thereby sidelining the voices of the leaders the meeting was meant to center. Talaga uses on-the-ground testimony - such as one leader's complaint, "If this is historic, then why can't I speak for my people?" - to argue that a supposedly historic moment instead became another instance of First Nations being silenced. With no other outlet weighing in, it is not possible to say whether this framing reflects a broader media consensus or remains a distinctly personal stance from the columnist.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Canada's branch-plant economy and foreign investment

This topic is covered by a single source. In a column for The Globe and Mail, Arthur Lam argues that Canada's traditional reliance on foreign-owned "branch-plant" economics has become a liability: multinationals have taken taxpayer-funded support while breaking promises on jobs and investment, enriching their foreign shareholders in the process. His sharpest criticism is directed at Canadian governments for having encouraged this model, and he calls for a policy shift that redirects public support toward Canadian-owned industry rather than subsidizing foreign-controlled firms. With no other outlet weighing in, there is no competing framing to compare - the column stands alone as a pointed critique of Canada's foreign-investment policy.

Sources: The Globe and Mail
Citations (1)

The Globe and Mail, Oct 28, 2026, p. 22

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Iran executions of athletes

This topic is covered by a single source. In a byline piece, Ed Aarons writing for The Guardian reports on a rising number of executions and threatened executions of Iranian athletes, including a mountain climber, framing these cases within the broader crackdown on anti-government protesters. The article emphasizes the pressure and surveillance faced by Iran's sporting community, draws on testimony from rights groups and relatives, and criticizes international bodies such as Fifa and the IOC for their perceived failure to hold Iran accountable.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 28

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

UK Sizewell C nuclear funding controversy

This topic is covered by a single source. In her Guardian article, Jillian Ambrose relays the findings of the UK's Public Accounts Committee, which brands the Sizewell C funding model a "terrible deal" for taxpayers. The piece frames the story critically, emphasizing the watchdog's warning that private investors are guaranteed returns while the public - through taxes and household energy bills - absorbs most of the financial risk, and that the government should rethink this model for future nuclear projects. With no other outlets covering the story, there is no competing angle or rebuttal to compare it against.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 35

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

US bans Chinese BYD vehicles at Japan military base

This topic is covered by a single source. The Guardian, in a report by Justin McCurry, reports that the US military has banned vehicles made by Chinese automaker BYD from Kadena airbase in Japan, citing fears that Chinese-made vehicle technology could be used to spy on personnel. The article situates the move within a broader US campaign to purge Chinese technology from military facilities amid rising tensions with China, Russia and North Korea, quoting the military's justification that the vehicles pose "an unacceptable and unmitigable risk" to personnel and mission. With no other outlet covering the story, there is no competing framing or differing emphasis to compare.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 31

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

UK budget amid cost-of-living and Iran conflict fallout

All three pieces on this topic come from The Guardian and together cover the same event - the unveiling of Chancellor Healey's budget - rather than offering competing outlooks. The first two reports, one bylined to Pippa Crerar, focus on the political framing: Healey presents the budget as a response to a "difficult moment" in which the Iran/Gulf conflict is driving up energy costs and squeezing household budgets, set against relief measures such as help with energy bills and higher bank taxes, while noting opposition criticism that the government is failing to address deeper fiscal problems. By contrast, the piece bylined to Richard Partington takes a more analytical, data-driven angle, using five charts to show how a Middle East-driven global inflation shock and bond-market pressure have roughly halved the chancellor's fiscal headroom - framing the budget's constraints as an inevitable consequence of external shocks rather than purely political choices.

Sources: The Guardian

Citations (3)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Healey targets cost of living crisis…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 8 — "Healey promises cost of living help…"

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9 — "Five charts behind the chancellor's decisions"

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

US-China AI and technology competition

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. In her Guardian report, Amy Hawkins describes how trillions of dollars have been wiped off Chinese stock markets in recent months amid weak domestic consumer demand and US technology restrictions, casting doubt on whether Beijing's state-backed investment model can sustain its AI ambitions in its race against the United States. With no other outlets covering the story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw.

Sources: The Guardian

Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 35

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Airbnb hosting and Israeli settlements

This topic is covered by a single source. In her column in The Guardian, Arwa Mahdawi folds a critique of Airbnb's role in Israeli settlements into a broader argument about the platform's exploitative, "soulless" character - her main target being hosts who impose chore lists on guests. The settlement point appears as a brief illustrative example ("it has enabled Israeli settlers to make money from illegal settlements built on stolen land") rather than as a dedicated investigation, so there is no competing framing from other outlets to compare - only Mahdawi's own personal stance, embedded within her wider indictment of Airbnb as a company.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 47

Society & Culture 1 source · 1 language

Drug legalization debate and Latin America cartels

Only one source addresses this topic. In an opinion piece for The Guardian, Keith Morris, a former UK ambassador to Colombia, argues that decades of prohibition have failed to curb drug flows while enriching and empowering cartels by preserving huge profit margins on cheaply produced drugs. He calls for legalizing and regulating cocaine markets along the lines of existing cannabis legalization, framing this as a way to undercut the cartels' economic base rather than merely combat their violence.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 61

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

Climate change economics and Stern Review legacy

This topic is covered by a single source: in a column for The Guardian, Fiona Harvey defends the legacy of Nicholas Stern's 2006 review, arguing that his warning that climate action makes economic sense has been vindicated, while rival economists such as William Nordhaus relied on flawed discounting models that undervalue future lives and have led governments, businesses and international institutions to dangerously underestimate climate risk. Since no other outlet addresses this topic, there is no cross-source contrast to draw - the piece stands as Harvey's own pointed intervention, insisting the world cannot afford to wait another two decades to heed Stern's warning.

Sources: The Guardian
Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 59

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Houthi strikes on Saudi Arabia and resilience

Both articles on this topic come from the Los Angeles Times and cover essentially the same underlying story - Saudi determination to carry on normally despite Houthi missile strikes on Riyadh's airport and other infrastructure. The first piece, bylined by Nabih Bulos, frames this resilience through the specific lens of a Riyadh entertainment festival, using the large crowds that turned out despite strikes that killed more than a dozen people as its central evidence of defiance. The second piece widens the aperture beyond that single event to the broader regional conflict tied to Iran, foregrounding residents' and officials' declared trust in the government and leadership - "We fully trust the government and the leadership in charge" - while also acknowledging the economic and security disruptions the strikes have caused. In effect, the newspaper tells the same story twice through different entry points: one grounded in a concrete cultural event as a symbol of normalcy, the other situating that same normalcy within the larger narrative of national solidarity amid an expanding regional war.

Sources: Los Angeles Times

Citations (2)

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Amid attacks, Saudis say life goes…"

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4 — "As missiles strike their country, Saudis…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

European far-right nationalism and EU integration

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source. In an opinion piece in The Guardian, the author warns that far-right leaders such as Le Pen and Weidel are working to hollow out EU institutions from within, and that a fragmented, weakened Europe resulting from this would serve only the interests of geopolitical rivals - China, Russia, and any future Maga-aligned successor to Trump. The author calls on pro-Europeans to mount a stronger defense of EU integration. Since no other outlet addresses the topic, there is no competing frame or alternative emphasis to compare it against.

Sources: The Guardian

Citations (1)

The Guardian, Oct 28, 2026, p. 58

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Ethiopia internal conflict and attacks on Christians

This topic is covered by a single source, the Los Angeles Times, in an article bylined by Khaled Kazziha. It reports that at least 60 Orthodox Christians were killed in two attacks in Ethiopia's Oromia region, with the country's Orthodox Church calling on authorities to protect civilians and prosecute those responsible. While the Ethiopian government blames the Oromo Liberation Army, the article situates the killings within a broader, ongoing multi-sided conflict and notes documented abuses committed by both rebel forces and government troops - framing the violence less as a simple act of sectarian terror than as part of a wider pattern of civilian suffering amid a protracted internal war.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

US-Cuba confrontation at the UN

This confrontation is covered only by the Los Angeles Times, in a report by Farnoush Amiri. The article recounts a public shouting match at the UN between US Ambassador Mike Waltz and Cuban officials over Washington's embargo and "maximum pressure" campaign, while placing particular emphasis on the humanitarian fallout of the US oil-tariff threat - widespread power outages disrupting cooking, water supply, and internet and phone service on the island. With no other outlet reporting on the episode, there is no cross-source contrast to draw, though it is notable that the piece frames the clash less as a diplomatic spat between governments and more through the lens of the hardship inflicted on ordinary Cubans.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

US midterm polling and Democratic strategy

Both pieces come from the Los Angeles Times but tackle different dimensions of Democratic strategy. In his column, Mark Z. Barabak focuses narrowly on the electoral horse race, arguing that despite Republican gerrymandering, Democrats look well-positioned to retake the House while the Senate remains a toss-up - though he cautions against over-reading polls or early-vote numbers. In a separate column, Jonah Goldberg shifts the frame entirely, addressing not electoral prospects but what Democrats should do with power once in office: he contends Trump's abuse of the pardon power is genuinely impeachable, but that hyperpartisanship makes conviction unattainable, so Democrats should pursue legislative reform and hearings rather than a doomed third impeachment attempt. Where Barabak offers a tactical, short-term read on the midterms themselves, Goldberg supplies a longer-term strategic caution, implying that electoral victory will not automatically translate into effective political leverage over the president.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (2)

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2 — "Some midterm signs point Democrats' way"

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13 — "The bad politics of a third…"

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

US deportation deal with Liberia

Coverage of this topic comes from a single source, Süddeutsche Zeitung. In his article, Paul Munzinger tells the story of Carlos Tellez, a Venezuelan deported by the Trump administration to Liberia, a country he had no prior connection to. The piece frames the US-Liberia deportation deal as morally, legally and politically fraught, and questions what benefit Liberia itself actually derives from the arrangement. With no other outlet covering the story, there is no competing angle to compare, but the choice to build the report around an individual human case implicitly conveys criticism of the broader US practice of deporting migrants to third countries.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 3

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

Künast's lawsuit against Meta over disinformation

This topic is covered by a single source. In his column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Wolfgang Janisch backs Renate Künast's legal battle against Meta, arguing that courts - and in particular Germany's Federal Court of Justice - should impose greater responsibility on social networks to remove defamatory and false content. He praises the European Court of Justice's steps toward platform accountability and expresses hope that the German federal court will likewise take "a bold step forward" in the same direction.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 4

Diplomacy & International Relations 1 source · 1 language

Swiss diplomacy with North Korea

This topic is covered by a single source: Süddeutsche Zeitung reports factually on Swiss Foreign Minister Ignazio Cassis's visit to Pyongyang - the first of its kind since 2003 - and on the reopening of Switzerland's diplomatic office there. The article frames the move as an effort to strengthen direct contacts with North Korean authorities and foster political dialogue, quoting the official rationale rather than offering its own editorial judgment. With no other outlet covering the event, there is no competing angle or dispute in the coverage to compare.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

Wrongful ICE detentions and deaths in custody

Both articles come from the Los Angeles Times but expose two distinct facets of the same systemic failure in how ICE handles detainees. In one piece, Ryan J. Foley documents how ICE held a mentally ill US citizen for nearly a year despite evidence of his citizenship, pointing to a structural bias in which any evidence supporting deportation is treated as credible while evidence contradicting it is dismissed as fraudulent - a critique of the agency's internal decision-making process. In the other, Andrea Castillo reports on the death of a Guatemalan detainee at the Otay Mesa Detention Center, the 61st such death under the current administration, focusing on county officials' demand for an independent investigation after the private prison operator refused to permit public health inspections - here the emphasis falls on the lack of transparency and accountability at privately run detention facilities. Together, these two pieces from the same newspaper build a composite picture of an immigration enforcement system operating with insufficient oversight, both toward those wrongly detained and toward those who die in its custody.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (2)

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 5 — "ICE has held citizen for months,…"

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 18 — "ICE detainee is dead in San…"

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

US DOJ prosecution of former FBI officials

This topic is covered solely by the Los Angeles Times, in a straight news report by Eric Tucker, Michael Kunzelman and Alanna Durkin Richer rather than an opinion piece. The article centers on a federal judge's sharp rebuke of the U.S. Attorney's Office in Washington for its irregular handling of a prosecution against two former FBI officials accused of lying about the Hunter Biden laptop investigation, a case tied to a now-disbanded task force that had monitored Russian and foreign influence operations. The judge's pointed question, "What is going on at the D.C. U.S. Attorney's Office?", anchors the piece's critical framing of prosecutorial conduct, but since no other source addresses this story, there is no competing angle or emphasis to compare - only a factual account presenting the episode as evidence of dysfunction within federal law enforcement.

Sources: Los Angeles Times
Citations (1)

Los Angeles Times, Oct 28, 2026, p. 5

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

EU climate adaptation policy

This topic is covered by a single source, so there is no competing framing to contrast. In a byline piece for Süddeutsche Zeitung, Jan Diesteldorf reports on the European Commission's new Climate Resilience law, which for the first time plans around a three-degree-warmer world by 2100 and requires member states to set adaptation deadlines. The article frames the move as a shift in mindset, from merely hoping to prevent warming to actively preparing for a harsher future, quoting the Commission's logic of not just "pondering and waiting" but readying for "a completely different future." At the same time, the piece folds in a critical note, citing observers who argue the EU has long neglected adaptation while focusing almost exclusively on mitigation, so the coverage reads less as a celebratory announcement and more as a belated correction to past policy neglect.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 7

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Russia's reinstatement in international sport

Only one source addresses this topic directly, so there is no cross-source debate to compare. In his column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, Johannes Knuth goes beyond criticizing individual federations such as the weightlifting body, arguing instead that the International Olympic Committee itself laid the groundwork for Russia's rehabilitation in global sport despite its invasion of Ukraine. He frames the lifting of sanctions and the return of Russian officials to influential positions within international federations as a betrayal of the IOC's own professed neutrality, placing responsibility squarely on the organization that is meant to enforce such standards rather than undermine them.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 23

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

Porsche's sales strategy amid tariffs and China slump

This topic is covered by a single source. Süddeutsche Zeitung offers a factual, analytical account of Porsche's dilemma: profits are rising even as sales fall, hit especially hard by EU import tariffs affecting the US market and by a roughly 33 percent slump in China. The report centers on CEO Michael Leiters' restructuring strategy, which includes 5,000 additional job cuts and an expected low point for the company only in 2027. The newspaper quotes Porsche's own internal assessment that, for now, it makes no economic sense to shift production to the United States despite the pressure created by American tariffs, implicitly highlighting the awkward position German manufacturers are placed in by current trade policy without necessarily altering their underlying production decisions.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 14

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

US prediction markets and election integrity

This topic is covered by a single source, USA Today, in an opinion column by Dace Potas. Potas does not challenge prediction markets like Kalshi and Polymarket as such but zeroes in on a specific risk: candidates and campaign staffers exploiting insider information - such as internal polling or an undisclosed decision to drop out of a race - to profit from bets the public cannot make on equal footing. His argument is a call to action, urging strict penalties and robust enforcement, including an outright ban on candidates and campaign staff betting on their own races. Since no other source addresses this issue, there is no cross-source contrast to draw; the coverage consists solely of this one columnist's warning about election integrity being compromised by insider exploitation of betting markets.

Sources: USA Today
Citations (1)

USA Today, Oct 28, 2026, p. 7

Trade & Economics 1 source · 1 language

German open-ended real estate fund crisis

Both pieces on the crisis in Germany's open-ended real estate funds come from the same newspaper, Süddeutsche Zeitung, and are signed by the same author, Meike Schreiber, yet they serve different functions. One is a straight news report tracing how DWS, a major fund manager, has restricted redemptions on its flagship property fund amid falling valuations, rising interest rates and the fallout from the Iran war, and it situates this within a wider pattern of closures and sudden write-downs at funds sold by German cooperative banks. In her column in Süddeutsche Zeitung, by contrast, Schreiber takes a sharper, more critical stance, arguing that the entire product category is fundamentally flawed: by promising daily liquidity while investing in illiquid property, these funds were marketed by banks and savings institutions as low-risk vehicles while the real redemption and loss risks were obscured, harming millions of ordinary savers. The combination gives readers both a concrete account of the unfolding crisis and a normative argument, from the same outlet and reporter, that such funds should never have existed in their current form.

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung

Citations (2)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13 — "Diese Produkte sollte es nicht geben"

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 13 — "Immobilienkrise trifft DWS-Anleger"

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

California's EV rebate program

This topic is covered by a single source. In his report for USA Today, Keith Laing presents California's new "MyFirstEV" rebate program - which offers $3,750 to first-time electric vehicle buyers - in straightforwardly positive, factual terms, highlighting that nearly 12,000 residents took advantage of it within just two months. He frames the program's early success as partly compensating for the federal EV tax credit that Trump eliminated in 2025, and links rising demand also to higher gas prices. With no other outlet weighing in on the story, there is no cross-source contrast to draw on emphasis or stance.

Sources: USA Today
Citations (1)

USA Today, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Scrutiny of Senate candidate El-Sayed's foreign policy views

This topic is covered by a single source. In her column in The Washington Post, Carine Hajjar argues that scrutiny of Senate candidate Abdul El-Sayed's radical foreign-policy positions - including his refusal to affirm Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state, his description of it as an "illegal apartheid regime," and his ties to controversial figures such as Hasan Piker - is legitimate and fact-based, rather than simply an expression of anti-Muslim bigotry as El-Sayed himself contends. With no other outlet addressing the story, there is no competing framing to compare it against.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

Haiti gang violence and international security force

This topic is covered by a single source. In the Washington Post, Widlore Mérancourt reports on the confusion surrounding remains found in Haiti and whether they belong to missing Salvadoran soldiers who served in the U.N.-backed Gang Suppression Force. The piece takes a careful, fact-driven approach, dwelling on forensic discrepancies - such as a body far taller than the missing technicians and a fragment of uniform from a foreign army - rather than offering a sweeping political verdict. It situates this uncertainty within the broader context of gang control over most of Port-au-Prince and a continuing political vacuum, emphasizing the human cost and disarray behind the international security mission rather than assigning blame or drawing policy conclusions. With no other source weighing in, there is no competing framing to contrast here.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 9

Domestic Politics 1 source · 1 language

Trump allies sowing election-integrity doubts ahead of midterms

Both articles come from The Washington Post and cover the same underlying story - Trump and his allies amplifying unsubstantiated claims about noncitizen voting and election fraud ahead of the midterms - but each emphasizes a different facet. The piece by Laura Meckler, Chris Hacker and Patrick Marley focuses on the scale and mechanics of the disinformation campaign, citing data that nearly 600 high-profile right-wing social media accounts, podcasts and other outlets have published more than 7,000 statements questioning the election's integrity this year, framing it as a coordinated effort to prime supporters to reject an unfavorable result. The piece by Warren P. Strobel, Ian Duncan and Mariana Alfaro broadens the lens to institutional consequences, reporting that Democrats and national security officials are preparing contingencies for the possibility that Trump will refuse to accept the results, including scenarios involving claims of foreign interference, and includes the stark line that officials are "making the presumption that the president will not accept the results." Together the two pieces complement each other: one quantifies the disinformation itself, the other traces its potential political and security fallout.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (2)

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 1 — "Trump and his allies are sowing…"

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 6 — "Trump and allies fuel skepticism about…"

Energy & Environment 1 source · 1 language

US nuclear waste policy and Finland's repository model

This topic is covered only by The Washington Post, in an unsigned editorial. The piece frames Finland's successful completion of the world's first permanent underground nuclear waste repository as a model of sustained political consensus and public buy-in, and uses that success explicitly to shame American policymakers, arguing that the U.S. should adopt a similar long-term approach to finally break its own decades-long impasse over nuclear waste storage. Since no other source addresses this story, there is no competing frame or rival emphasis to weigh against it - the comparison here is internal to the editorial itself, between Finland's achievement and America's perceived failure.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 16

Migration & Society 1 source · 1 language

ICE detention of Hong Kong rights advocates

Coverage of this story comes from a single source. In an unsigned editorial, The Washington Post criticizes the Trump administration for allowing deferred enforced departure protections for Hong Kong rights advocates to lapse, warning that this has left activists vulnerable to detention by ICE and potential deportation back to Hong Kong under Chinese Communist Party rule. The editorial frames these individuals as people who risked themselves advocating for the restoration of political freedoms in their home city, and argues that abandoning them now would expose "good people" to "cruel and unjust fates." With no other outlet covering this specific development, there is no competing framing to compare - the piece stands as a singular institutional rebuke of US immigration enforcement policy toward Hong Kong dissidents.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 16

Security & Conflict 1 source · 1 language

US military space weapons and great-power competition

Only one source addresses this topic. In a column in The Washington Post, DT Thompson defends the U.S. Air Force's public acknowledgment of space control weapons, framing it as a necessary and stabilizing move rather than an escalation. Thompson argues that China and Russia have long been weaponizing space, making American deterrence capability essential to protect critical satellite infrastructure and the safety of U.S. service members. With no other outlet covering this story, there is no competing framing or alternative emphasis to compare it against.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 17

Technology & Media 1 source · 1 language

Iran and Russia's war on satellite internet access

Only one source addresses this topic. In an opinion piece for The Washington Post, Jamie Fly and Jennifer Brody argue that Iran and Russia are systematically working to block or control satellite internet access, particularly through efforts aimed at services like Starlink, in order to preserve censorship and prevent citizens from organizing and documenting human rights abuses. Rather than simply describing the problem, the authors explicitly call on the United States and other democracies to take action - expanding satellite internet access, funding existing capabilities, and ensuring the safety of users living under repressive regimes. Since this is a single opinion piece rather than institutional reporting, there is no cross-source comparison of differing angles here; instead it presents a clear advocacy-driven framing that positions the issue as part of a broader struggle between democracies and authoritarian regimes over freedom of information.

Sources: The Washington Post
Citations (1)

The Washington Post, Oct 28, 2026, p. 15

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

US-Zwischenwahlen 2026 / Trumps Handels- und Iranpolitik

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Die Autorin berichtet, dass Trumps Zölle und der Iran-Krieg die Dünger- und Dieselpreise für Farmer in Iowa stark erhöht haben, was republikanische Stammwähler verunsichert und den Demokraten Chancen eröffnet, einen traditionell roten Bundesstaat zu gewinnen. Key excerpt: "„Aber unsere Geduld geht tatsächlich langsam zu Ende.“"

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

US-Zwischenwahlen 2026 / Wählerverhalten junger Männer

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Der Autor analysiert, wie junge Männer 2024 Trump zum Sieg verhalfen, weil sie sich wirtschaftliche Verbesserungen erhofften, diese Versprechen aber nicht eingelöst wurden, was den Demokraten nun neue Chancen bei den Midterms eröffnet, sofern sie diese Wählergruppe mobilisieren können. Key excerpt: "Heute kann von einem uneingelösten Versprechen sprechen."

Sources: Süddeutsche Zeitung
Citations (1)

Süddeutsche Zeitung, Oct 28, 2026, p. 2

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

Soziale Unruhen und Integration in Frankreich und Großbritannien

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): Der Autor argumentiert, dass Großbritannien trotz seines Selbstbildes als tolerant und stabil bereits ähnliche gesellschaftliche Spaltungen wie Frankreich erlebt, getrieben durch gescheiterte Integrationspolitik, islamistische Radikalisierung und eine wachsende Kluft zwischen Staat und wütender Mehrheitsgesellschaft. Er warnt, dass beide Länder eine 'woke Moral' verinnerlicht haben, die nationalen Stolz untergräbt und so die Gewaltbereitschaft begünstigt. Key excerpt: "Großbritannien hat französische Verhältnisse nicht vor sich, es steckt schon mittendrin."

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 7

Additional Coverage 1 source · 1 language

Hungary's eurozone accession reforms

Additional coverage (not merged into a cross-source comparison): The author argues Hungary's new government under Péter Magyar is implementing deep, credible fiscal reforms aimed at eventual euro adoption, creating a lucrative but manageable-risk opportunity for investors in Hungarian bonds, though further painful austerity will be needed. Key excerpt: "Deutschland diskutiert, Ungarn handelt. Die neue Regierung in Budapest hat gerade eine Reihe von Reformen auf den Weg gebracht."

Sources: Die Welt
Citations (1)

Die Welt, Oct 28, 2026, p. 10